Get Your Subscription Renewal FREE !!!

HERE'S HOW IT WORKS...

Once you've purchased our book, you can receive a $5.00 credit toward your renewal for every person you recommend to us, who also subscribes for a full year. To qualify, the person subscribing must send us a subscription form with your name on it along with payment. Additionally, the person subscribing must be a new applicant and have never purchased our book in the past. In the event of any discrepancy as to who gets the credit, the decision of our management staff will be binding & final.

In this guide you'll find several subscription referral forms. Feel free to copy them as much as you'd like or ask us for additional copies. Make sure to put your name on the form. Once we receive payment, we'll credit your account with the $5.00. Send us just eight people who subscribe... and your renewal is FREE !!! It's that simple. If you have any questions, just call us and ask. Otherwise, start working toward your subscription renewal right away !!!

Thanks for being part of our family of subscribers!

When we started the concept of publishing a guide to the art & craft shows over seventeen years ago, we envisioned a book that would be the result of a vast networking of exhibitors. It wasn't to be any one person's idea of what a guide should be. After all, who knows your work and it's market better than you... the person who is "in the trenches" every week... talking to customers... listening to stories... dealing with inclement weather... tolerating unreasonable show sponsors and a whole slew of other things that it takes to succeed in this business.

Over the years we've heard many of your suggestions and if you've been a subscriber for more than just a couple of years you've seen us implement many of your ideas. We've seen this publication transform from something that resembles our flyer... into one of the more influential guides on America's eastern coast. We've grown from a circulation that included a few friends... to one that numbers in the thousands... and we're read by even more! God willing and with your support, we hope this growth continues... but most of all, we hope to continue to be one of the most useful tools you have in your quest to have your own business grow with the same good fortune we've had. Here's some information you ought to know.

HOW & WHY WE PUBLISH EVERY THREE MONTHS...

We publish four times per year... Winter, Spring, Summer & Fall. Each time we publish, we list events for up to one year in advance. The reason we do that is because in order to get into many of the larger events, you have to send your application in several months before the show to be considered. For most events though the planning is only done a few months before the event and of course we can't publish information if the event sponsor hasn't even set a date. That's why every three months or so we delete everything that's already happened and then put in all the updated information that has just become available. That's good news because most exhibitors don't have the funds to book so many events so far in advance and even if you did, the chances of being accepted to every event you apply for are minimal. Everyone's schedule usually consists of a few shows booked months in advance and then some they book only a couple weeks beforehand. Every three months you'll get a fresh batch of shows and a new opportunity to book events!

HOW THE BOOK IS ORGANIZED

The book is divided into five sections. The "Art & Crafts Showcase" is the first section. Here you'll read articles about improving your business, show reviews, advertising to help you learn more about specific events and business opportunities, show reviews, a listing of professional promoters and much more!

The second section is called "Shows At A Glance." Here you'll have the ability to see a quick overview of the shows taking place each week. They are organized first by date, then by number of days and then by city and show sponsor. You'll be able to see enough information about each show to find it in the main listing section of the guide which we'll talk about in a few moments.

The third section is the "Location Cross Reference." In this index we break down the state into seven regions, alphabetize the cities and then tell you what's happening in each city throughout the year in date order. This is handy when you'd like to find shows to participate in that are close by or if you hear about a great event in a specific city and want to find out the details.

The fourth section is named "The Shows." This is the main listing section of the guide where you'll find complete details about each event. If you've been a subscriber for very long, you'll see that we've incorporated a new organization in this section. As we've expanded the coverage of our guide, finding shows exactly where you want them has become a bit more difficult. So, for those of you who only want to participate in certain regions you'll now find all the shows separated by state... and then by dates within each state. We hope this will help you spend time looking exactly where you want to look! We also include information for select shows outside the SOUTHEASTERN area, you'll find those shows in a place by themselves as well. The idea behind the information we present here is to give you enough information about each event to see if it meets your criteria for an event you'd like to participate in. Since the very nature of our work is so unique, what works best for one exhibitor may be a terrible situation for another. After all, if the same thing worked for everyone, there would only be a handful of shows each week and everyone would be creating the same thing. Luckily for all of us that isn't the case. No one could possibly participate in 3500 shows throughout the year, but by having a great number of choices at your fingertips, you stand a lot better chance of making a good match between your work and the market you'd like to exhibit in. Additionally, no one knows your work and your market better than you do and no one can make a better decision on which shows to participate in than you can. Usually if you do well at a show, you'll do well at other events that have similar characteristics. This information gives you the ability to put your knowledge to work and make informed decisions about the shows you choose.

The final section is "The Deadline Alert." If you've never missed a deadline, you probably haven't booked too many shows! We've all done it. And usually the one we've missed is an event we've been dying to try. Once again "Where The Shows Are!!!" comes to the rescue. Not every show has a deadline date, in fact many just keep taking applications until they are full. Quite a few however require that your application be received by a specified time. Here you'll find all the shows with deadlines listed first by the actual deadline date, then the date of the show and then you'll see enough brief information so that you can locate the show in the main listing section of the guide. Check this section weekly and you'll avoid the disappointment of missing the deadline date!

WHO'S RESPONSIBLE FOR WHAT?

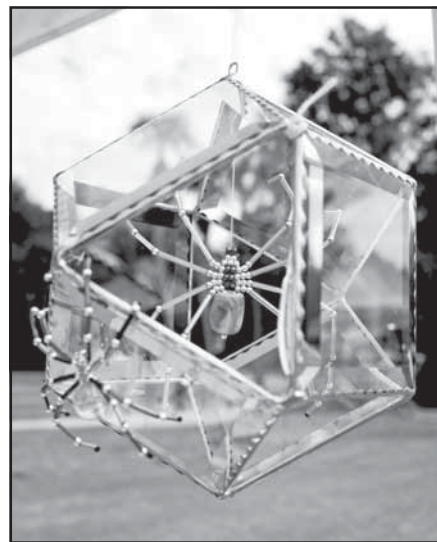

There are almost 1200 shows listed in this issue of "WHERE THE SHOWS ARE!!!" and certainly not all of them will be right for you. Make sure you personally call the sponsor of each show you are interested in to get the most up-to-date information on that particular event.

Our listings come from a wide variety of sources and we do everything possible to be as accurate as possible. However because we are human, we make mistakes once in a while and we can not assume responsibility for any inconveniences this may cause. However if you let us know of any discrepancies, we will correct the error in our next issue. No matter how hard we try, there are some shows that we miss, and don't include in our guide. And it never fails, that as soon as we print an issue, someone calls us with a show we never even thought of. Remember this guide is designed to be of a benefit to all who use it. So if you see missing shows, please let us know and we'll verify all the details and include it in our next issue. Your help, will help a great many others!!! We'd also like to ask you to be fair with yourself and with us... Since the intent of our guide is for individuals to use for the express purpose of investigating arts and craft shows per se, any other use, copying, reproduction in any way or selling of the information we provide is strictly illegal without the express written permission of "Where The Shows Are!!!"

Whenever I go to a show and look down a street that's lined with hundreds of exhibitors or maybe some park crammed completely full, it's interesting to note that although there are a lot of people with similar items... one or two of those people will always be the "shining stars" when it comes to selling. What makes that difference? Of course there are a lot of variables, but one variable that stands out above the others is usually the ability to encourage shoppers to buy from them rather than the competition. How do we accomplish that? Read on... the answer may help you produce more sales at every event you participate in.

It helps to realize that most people purchase items from people they like. Other factors can play a critical role... and we'll discuss those soon... but first and foremost the customer has to like you and what he sees before he'll give much consideration to purchasing. To put this in perspective, think for a moment about things you purchase for yourself. If you were to walk into a store where the clerk was foul mouthed and hadn't bathed for a week, would you purchase anything you didn't absolutely need? Chances are you wouldn't... and if you could get a similar product somewhere else you'd probably go there even if it were inconvenient! I'm not suggesting you have to be quite this obvious to drive customers from your booth, but even little things can turn a customer off and send him down the road to the next exhibitor. Here are a few things you can do to help put more money in your pocket

1. Make Sure You Look Your Best.

Always make sure your personal appearance is neat and tidy. This doesn't mean you have to dress like you just walked out of the pages of "Gentleman's Quarterly" or "Vanity Fair," but it does mean that your clothing should be free of stains and grease marks. Your hair should be arranged in an attractive manner, and if you wear cologne, make sure it's some middle of the road type of scent that is not overbearing or obnoxious. Although to some people smoking is not a habit... it's a lifestyle they can't live without... try living without it for a few hours during the show and I'll bet it makes a difference in your sales. If you like to have an alcoholic drink or two during a show (provided it's permitted) make sure to have some mints of some other way to cover the odor because although some people could care less, others would be very turned off by the scent. Because all of us have to deal with the reality of setup and tear-down at shows, which may mean leaving home many hours before an event, it may be smart to bring along a change of clothing, a toothbrush and an electric razor so you can do some last minute "touch ups" before the buying crowd starts to arrive. You'll never please everyone with your personal appearance, but you should try to strike some happy medium so that you'll be acceptable to the vast majority of customers.

2. Make sure your display looks attractive and uncluttered. I know I'm as guilty as the next guy when it comes to this. After all, we try to stuff a whole lot of merchandise into a very small area with next to no time to do it. And, to make matters worse, a lot of times we have to park so far away that running out to re-stock can be next to impossible especially if you're at the show by yourself and the customers are coming in by the bus loads. Unfortunately this whole issue may not be a problem if you aren't selling... so at this point let's worry first about selling enough merchandise to have to worry about re-stocking! That begins by making sure you booth's appearance it pleasant enough to make the customer comfortable about buying. Make sure to bring along some tarps or other coverings for your under stock. Sometimes you can actually disguise the under stock as part of your display by using the covered boxes as a podium for certain pieces of work. I saw a jeweler at a show one time who wheeled in these tall, skinny boxes containing all his work that then opened up to become the walls of his booth. At the end of the show he just simply folded everything up again and in about 10 minutes his walls became his containers again and he was packed up ready to go home just a few minutes later. Now not all of us are lucky enough to have something that packs as easily as jewelry, but if we use a little bit of our creativity to consider the display alternatives the results can be impressive!

Part of the planning for the show begins at home. Make sure the canopy top is clean and the legs are free of rust. If the top needs cleaning, many of the fabric type tops can be washed with woolite in a large washer at a laundry mat. The plasticized tops can be washed at home with a variety of cleaners recommended by the manufacturer. No matter which type canopy top you have they can all be cleaned! Make sure to follow the manufacturer's recommendations... I wouldn't want to be responsible for suggesting something that would destroy your top! The canopy legs can be cleaned too if they've become rusty. A quick trip to your local automotive supply shop will allow you to see a wide variety of rust removing agents and protective products to prevent the rust from coming back too soon. I know it's a pain in the neck to clean these things, but the appearance of your canopy says a lot about the way you look at an event and that determines a lot about the amount of product you sell. I've noticed that some of the newer frames are now powder coated rather than bare metal... this is a great idea and looks good too! Commercial powder coating is available for your old frame too and surprisingly it's not too terribly expensive in most cases. If your frame is galvanized don't try painting it because paint will not adhere to a galvanized surface.

While we're on the subject of display, make sure that there is no trash hanging around the booth. Little pieces of paper from your packaging... that wrapper from the breakfast sandwich you had this morning... the can from your soda you just finished... may not seem like much, but all this can really be an eyesore for the customer. You wouldn't want to purchase anything from a store that had trash lying around and neither do your prospective customers! Once you're set up and periodically throughout the day take an objective look at your booth as a customer would and make sure it meets with the standards you would set if you were to do business there.

3. Watch What You Say. I know that I'm usually one of the first people I know to put my foot in my mouth with comments I might make... but even I'll have to admit that generally it's not the best idea. Make sure you give careful consideration to the things you say at a show. You may think that what you're saying is funny or you simply intend to entertain the customers a bit but the perception may be quite different on the receiving end of your comments. Unfortunately in the 30 seconds or so that we get to know a customer we have no idea what kind of life experiences they may have had. Maybe they we teased by siblings for being a bit chubby when they

a way as to keep the prospective customer's interest. By keeping the interest level high, we slow the customer down and this is extremely important if we intend to convert this person from a prospect to a customer. Although most people at a show certainly don't buy on price alone... otherwise they'd be shopping in Big Lots or Wal-Mart, price will get their attention. That's why we always try to have something in the front of our booth... right at eye level... that's an extremely good value AND something that is very moderately priced. Another idea is to have a "grab bag" of things in the front of the booth. Something the customer has to sort through to get the goody they want. This not only slows the customer down so they can notice other things in the booth, it also creates activity in the front of your booth and that usually makes other shoppers curious about what's going on in there. Shoppers are kind of like mosquitoes around a light... the more you have, the more you get! I've often noticed that when I walk throughout a show and stop in someone's booth to talk for a moment they almost always get busy right away even if the rest of the day was very slow. At first I thought I was just a good omen! And of course I like to constantly promote that idea... but the reality is that the shoppers don't know why I'm standing there... they only know that there must be something they're missing out on and all of a sudden the booth is full of inquisitive customers. Because people are naturally competitive, the quantity of inquisitive people produces a "sense of urgency" to buy before the other guy does and the result... great sales!

5. Instill The Urge To Purchase Now!
That "sense of urgency" we just created a moment ago is also an essential part of selling. What it means, is that you've provided the customer some reason to act immediately. Whether this reason is actual, perceived, or just an excuse you've provided the customer to buy now is not nearly as important as the fact that you've provided it. If a shopper doesn't feel this need, chances are he or she will not buy. As a sales person part of your job is to remind the customer of these things. Christmas is a good example. Since presents are expected of everyone and it occurs on a specific date, Christmas is a great "sense of urgency" generator and explains why fall sales are usually so good. All the other holiday's were no doubt created by someone in marketing to stimulate sales as well. Stop by a Hallmark store sometime and look over all the different “holidays” they’ve created. I think they have a card for just about any day of the week and for every purpose known to man. It’s worthwhile to acquaint yourself with all these days because you may be able to use some of them to push a customer into a sale. Along those same lines, don’t forget to remind shoppers of birthdays, anniversaries and so on.

Another “sense of urgency” generator we have as exhibitors is the unique nature of our work. Many times it’s impossible to create two pieces exactly alike. They may be similar in some cases, but since virtually everything is made “one up,” the chances of getting identical pieces is remote. Make sure to bring this point up to the customer because if they like what they see, this may be the only chance they’ll ever have to purchase this particular piece.

The mobile nature of shows can also work in your favor. Over the years I’ve found that selling right here in our home town is not usually as successful as selling somewhere a bit further away. At home a lot of the people are under the impression they can just “stop by” and purchase from us anytime so they want to spend their money with people they’ll probably never see again or may only see occasionally. Now of course this isn’t true... we’re not going to set up our display for one or two people (although you’d be surprised at the number of people that expect us to). Truth has nothing to do with perception in this case and the bottom line is that even when we’re close to home I never try to make a big deal of it. If asked a direct question about our location I’ll naturally tell the customer but I also make sure they understand that we don’t have a retail location and the only place we sell is at the shows. Sometimes this works, but a lot of times they’ll say “do you have a card, I’ll give you a call.” The end result is no sale. If possible use your “out of town” status to your advantage and give people the impression that they must purchase today if they want what you have. Although a few of them may call you later, the statistics are against you in virtually every case.

Statistically not many people will actually return to your booth, a few of them will and so rather than following customers around a show, it's better to look around and make note of a few landmarks that will make it easy to find your booth. Try to come up with something that is easy to remember and visually very apparent. You may be right in front of a well known local business or right across from the town's clock tower or just around the corner from the newspaper stand. If you look you'll probably find something easy for customers to remember. Sometimes shows will provide a map for customers to follow. If they do, ask for several extra copies and with a yellow highlighter you can create custom maps right to your booth! Not only that, but later in the day the show sponsors usually run out of these maps and you can be a real hero to someone who doesn't have one!

7. Make It Easy For The Customer To Pay. Car dealers and real estate agents have this one down to a science. And in this particularly competitive market today we're seeing them pull out all the stops! Low interest financing... no down payments... subsidized options... you name it and they have it! Unfortunately most of us don't have the capital and resources of GM or US Homes, but we do have tools we can use. Cash is usually the preferred way to do business at a show because it's a definite indicator of a final sales. And to make this easier for the customer some shows actually set up ATM's at the event. If they do... GREAT!, But if they don't as is the case most of the time, take a little time to walk around the town and find out where they are... that way you can direct the customers to them. You'll be surprised at how many locals have no idea where a convenient ATM is let alone customers from out of town.

Another good business tactic is to actually have a business account set up so you can take checks written to your business name rather than to your personal name. Not only does this help when it comes time to sort out your taxes, but it lends credibility to your business in the eyes of the customer and suppliers. Many banks offer a "DBA" (doing business as) account for small businesses that offer terms similar to a personal account rather than a full blown business account with tons of fees. Shop around a bit and you'll probably find one.

If you can afford to take credit cards, do it! If you sell only low ticket items under $50.00 or so this may be an expensive solution. But it also gives you more ability to raise your prices a bit to cover the extra expense. Credit card companies have done a wonderful job of marketing and people will almost always spend more money and pay higher prices when they aren't parting with cash! When you think about it logically this makes no sense at all because not only are the customers paying more and spending more, they have to pay interest on it too! But here's another area when truth and perception have nothing to do with reality so take advantage of the situation and make some more money.

If you don't want to or can't take credit cards and you've made the judgement call that the customer appears to be honest, you may want to allow them to make payments directly to you. This is especially advantageous if you sell higher ticket items like an expensive piece of furniture some jewelry or maybe a painting. A $600.00 dollar piece is a lot more affordable in four $150.00 payments rather than the full purchase price today. Another advantage is that it gives you income over the next few months. If you get enough of these types of purchases going, the monthly income can be impressive. Although in my experience most people who enter into this kind of agreement are honest and do pay as agreed, a few will no doubt stiff you. Try to come up with some sort of simple contract that you have the customer sign so they feel obligated to pay and of course you have some sort of proof they actually own you the money. Collections can be difficult and you may not really want to be bothered with them so always make sure the amount you collect up front is enough to cover all your costs so that even if you loose the profit you've at least collected the cost. A simple computer program like Intuit's "Quick Books" makes setting up billing a real snap. Don't ignore this technique... countless galleries and other distributors of artwork have driven up prices substantially and made fortunes by taking payments... you can too!

Another technique you can use particularly with fine art is leasing your work. Many times a business may not want the permanency of a "collection," but does want the ambiance that original work can provide. Here is an excellent opportunity for you to make money on your work and still retain ownership! Thousands of businesses lease machines, cars, computers, plants and just about everything else you can think of... why not decor too! Not only does it allow them to decorate with good taste, it allows them to do it at a fraction of the cost and once they get tired of the look.... it's easy to change! Best of all once they get sick of the look you've provided you get the piece back in your hands ready to lease to someone else or to sell outright! You can also offer a buyout price at the end of the lease if the company decides to keep the work. Here again you'll need to create a contract with the customer establishing terms, ownership and who's responsible for the work while it's out of your possession etc... and you'll have to set up a billing system... but the potential profit is outstanding and it could be yours!

"Popping The Top" on sales does usually require taking a real objective look at what you're doing now and possibly making some changes. And... I'd caution you NOT to change those things that do work for you and you're happy with. BUT, if you want to increase your sales or give them an extra little push, then give some thought to some of the suggestions I've made. It may require a little thinking "outside of the box." But a wise salesman once told me... "If you want things to continue the way they are, keep doing the things your doing now... If you want things to change, it's up to you to make the change" they choice is yours. Chances are if you were completely happy with your sales you would have never read this far in this article and with a new season right on the horizon along with all the big economic changes that have taken place recently, this is a great time to giving some serious thought to your future plans! Why not "Pop The Top" on sales this coming year!

You're Work Is Ready... By Fred Gonzales What's Next?

If you're like most of us, you've put a lot of thought and probably a fair amount of resources both financially and spiritually into your work. Finally you've arrived at something you're proud to create and something you think will be competitive in the market... but now what? How can I turn my idea into a steady stream of earnings? Here at "Where The Shows Are!!!" we don't have all the answers, but we have seen quite a few people turn their dreams into reality and as the old proverbial saying goes... "there's more than one way to skin a cat!"

The idea of "more than one way" is the key to success for most of us. Of course since you're probably already participating in events, the first thing that comes to mind is selecting some shows and setting up your booth. That's certainly one way to do it... and if you choose that route then you'll want to do everything you can to make sure this part of your business is a success. Make certain you create an interesting display that shows off your work in the best possible light... make sure you tell customers exactly how they might use your work to their benefit... have a friendly atmosphere conducive to buying... the list goes on and on. In fact, if you want to get more details on this aspect of marketing your work then make sure to read the other article in this edition called "Pop the Top on Sales." There are an incredible amount of things you can do to maximize your work.

One of the nice things about owning your own business is that you're not limited to any one particular way of making sure to turn your creativity into income. Participating in shows is an important part of a marketing plan... but to create a solid base of income it shouldn't be the ONLY part of your plan. The advantage you have by participating art or craft shows is that they allow you a place where you can come in contact with a great number of people... and to find those individuals who are interested in the work you do and the products you create. There are two ways you can look at these people... as either the end of the sale... or as the beginning. If you look at this relationship as the "end result" then of course you take your money and go home. Next week there will be more customers and more sales... hopefully. But if you look at the relationship you've created as the beginning of several sales then you'll have a constant flow of prospects to continue to buy your work.

There are some definite disadvantages of using shows as an exclusive way to sell your work, and exhibitors are always asking me how to smooth out the ups and downs of their business. Certainly they'll still exist no matter what tact you take... it's simply the nature of business and sales... but it's not necessary to ride the wild roller coaster ride that shows alone can create. My opinion has always been to use art and craft shows as a springboard to additional sales rather than as an end in itself. Having a customer who has bought from you in the past is a very valuable commodity. It's up to you to seize the opportunity presented to you and capitalize on it. Make sure to keep a list of past customers so you can invite them to future events, keep them posted on new work you've created, let them know about interesting things you've found at other shows or maybe even something exciting you've found in your travels to other shows. Creating an ongoing interest in you and your work will also create future sales.

In keeping with the "springboard" philosophy, take the time to use a bit of conversation to find out as much as you can about the people you've just sold to. Maybe they own a store where they'd be interested in displaying your work. Possibly they have a business or civic connection where you could exhibit. Or... if they really like your work, they may be interested in having a home party or a business luncheon where your work is featured. If you don't like this kind of thing, fine that's up to you... but there is a lot of money to be made using the home party/luncheon idea, just ask Tupperware, Mary Kay, Christmas Around the World or hundreds of other companies that make millions a year using this simple idea. The nice thing is you can use this marketing technique to fill in a dead weekend or time during the week. If you're looking for a way to structure the event, just get a Tupperware party manual or one of the other guides. These people are experts in the field and you don't have to reinvent the wheel.

Galleries are another approach that can supplement sales. Don't be discouraged if the first few you talk to don't want to handle your work. Believe me, there are as many different types of galleries as there are different types of shows. In this category of retail outlets there is a range of venues all the way from little hand craft consignment shops to places that exhibit the fine art work of the great masters! Just as you'll have to look to find a show that meets your needs, you can find a gallery that will do the same. The financial arrangements here are as vast as the variety of work represented. The main thing to look for is a place offering a fair deal for you. Certainly you need to part with enough of the profits to make the sale enticing for the gallery... but you don't want to cut yourself short here either. If you can't make a decent profit it's not worth your while regardless of what you may be told. Additionally, it is worth your while to research the reputation of the place you intend to do business with. Make sure other artists or craftsmen are being paid promptly upon the sale of their work. Ask for references and make sure to check them out. See how the work is being displayed... will you be getting a prominent position in the building or will you be stuck in some out of the way corner? Can you temporarily remove the work to participate in a show? Are you obligated to pay a commission to the gallery even if you sell the work yourself? Make sure to read whatever contract you sign. If keeps your frustration under control and alleviates potential future disagreements.

An outside sales representative may be another idea that could make some money for you. Just like the galleries these come in all shapes and sizes! Usually these people will be representing a wide variety of products as they prospect for business. And sure you could make a bunch of sales calls yourself too... but the advantage here is that the cost of making those calls is divided among several different businesses rather than absorbed by one person. It may not be worth your while to drive from Ft. Myers, FL to Savannah to meet with a shop owner about handling your widget... but it's well worth time for someone representing a couple of dozen people such as yourself. It can also be difficult for you to really promote your product yourself without sounding like a braggart. A third party can do this on a sales call and it sounds perfectly fine.

Like the galleries, you'll want to find out all you can about any sales rep you may decide to partner with. You'll want to have a trusting relationship with the rep and make certain he or she is looking out for your best interests as well as their own. You also want to make sure the rep is not overstating your production capability or your ability to produce the work at what would be slave wages. I know of a least two exhibitors who landed a big account with a national restaurant chain that features a craft area as you walk in the door. It sounded like a great deal at the onset... but after employing everyone they could think of to make the products and to deliver on time, and then dealing with delays in getting paid, the end result was a far cry from the initial concept of the plan. Don't allow someone else to push you into a deal that doesn't seem to be favorable and take the time to really figure out how you'll produce enough product before you sign on the dotted line!

Trader type of radio and TV shows can be another source of income and an additional way to market your work. Although most radio and TV stations would much rather have you simply pay for advertising and sell your work... inevitably many stations wind up with time they can't sell. At the cost of running a production facility these days no one can just let that time pass so to fill it they'll occasionally take some things on concession. Unless your product is selling like hot cakes and the station is making money hand over fist... you're probably not going to get exposure on the evening news or during radio drive time... but the possibility of making some sales is good for both you and the station. If you've ever suffered from insomnia or been up late driving to some show in the middle of nowhere I'm sure you've heard or seen some of these types of promotions.

Fund raisers can be another great way to make money. Civic organizations, schools, clubs, scouts, sports teams and many more type of organizations are constantly trying to figure out a way to make money. Why not consider making your product part of a solution for them and yourself at the same time. The possibilities are only limited by your imagination. Here again the formula for success has been laid out by plenty of people who came before you. If you spend some time doing a bit of research, chances are you can adapt many ideas to your products. It's also possible to just simply call a company you've heard about that is doing fund raisers and ask them to send you information. You may also even want to consider going in on this with another exhibitor or two so you have a wider array of products you can offer. I was involved with an elementary school fund raiser when my kids were in school and I was just absolutely amazed how much money changed hands and the level of profit there is to be made!

Another thought for additional sales is to start a "club" of buyers. I'm sure you've been approached by Gevalia Coffee or BMG Music club or Book of the Month Club and others. This doesn't work with all products we make, but it does lend itself to some. In this scenario you target people who want to automatically receive variations of your product on a regular basis. Certainly you'll have to be imaginative to keep the interest going but that can be done with a bit of planning and of course by virtue of the fact you'll doubtlessly have turnover in your customer base. Newer customers would be candidates for all your different products while those that have been with you for some time would be a bit more of a challenge. If however you produce a consumable then the problem is solved for repeat offers. This idea would work with something like "candle of the month", "personal care items" (soaps, body oils etc.), pottery, some country crafts, hot sauces... even jewelry could be a possibility. So you don't get stuck with a lot of deadbeat sales, make sure you let the customer know what is coming next and when it will be arriving. You'll also want to have pre-authorization on a credit card so you can ensure payment. None of us are large enough to absorb thousands of dollars in losses by handling this any other way.

If you're in the fine art business with something like painting or sculpture, you may want to consider renting your work to businesses or individuals. Although there are a few true collectors out there, the vast majority of people will be using your work as a decor accent or maybe even a focal piece to set a theme in their home or business. The reality is however that these tastes change over time. What appeals to someone this month may become old hat within a relatively short time. And in addition, businesses that have a regular clientele have to constantly keep a fresh look and so that mean having constant change to the decor. These are great candidates for art rental. After all... why pay full price for something you only plan on using for a few months? If it turns out the customer really likes the piece and wants to keep it permanently then fine... you can have a pre-arranged buy-out price. If on the other hand they'd just like to rotate the work that's no problem either. Just remove the piece from business "A" and replace it with a piece you had in business "B". "A" and "B" just simply switch out decor and you have a constant stream of income. You can even have various tiers of the service based on whether you're using originals or prints. Everyone comes out a winner in this situation.

Keeping your cash flowing during tight economic times is a challenge for all businesses, but it's especially challenging for businesses such as ours where all of us deal in the "wants" business instead of the "needs" business. Of course it's great if you can make all the income you need by doing a couple of shows per month on the weekends... but right now that can be difficult for many of us. Unusual times such as those we're currently experiencing requires unusual thinking in order to stay afloat. Think a bit outside the box, put those thoughts to work and we should all be around to share "business as usual" when it returns to the shows!

In the last issue I took a few moments before delving into the show reviews to speak a bit about surviving tough economic times. If you've been in the business for any length of time then you know that this isn't the first time most of us have faced an economic crisis. In this issue I've specifically focused on writing articles designed to get you thinking outside of the box about ways to make money in the arts and ways to sharpen your chances of actually making the sale once you get in contact with a customer. If you're new to the shows... then this information will be extremely valuable to you. If you've been around for a while, it's always good to review what you do know because all of us forget what we already know from time to time. In fact, "forgetting" what we already know and not employing it to our fullest advantage is one of the leading causes in declines of sales. Getting back to the basics or what made you successful in the first place will usually save the day when economic hard times such as we're experiencing now greets you at the door! The moral of the story... if you haven't read the other articles in this edition... please do yourself a favor and take a moment to read them.

As I write this section, the fall season is only a few weeks old... and already we've visited quite a few shows all over the southeast. Those of you who have seen us at the shows have been quite generous with your information and as usually we try to pass on what sounds good! One impression I have personally is that there seems to be quite a bit of inconsistency among shows. It doesn't seem to matter whether the event is a fine art show or a craft show... a private promoter or an independent show. I'll go to an event on a Saturday afternoon and sales are going great! Then Sunday morning I'll take off for another very similar show and I arrive to find half the exhibitors decided to pack up early because sales were so slow. I can see this happening in first or second year shows without a track record... but I'm still trying to find an explanation why I'm seeing this with long term events with good track records.

I guess one of these days I'll get a crystal ball that tells me the truth all the time and allows me to only pick the most successful events! Until that time I guess I'll just keep trying to make the best educated guesses I can. The economy can change the "rules of engagement" and so maybe we have to throw out the old book and start writing a new one. We still do see at least some consistency between those events that will spend a fair amount of money on advertising... and those shows who tend to rely on "word of mouth" or "reputation" or maybe a few Public Service Announcements on the local radio station. All too often these events take a nose dive quickly... even if they've been successful in

In the Southeast, early season shows are always difficult to predict for two reason... weather and lack of snowbirds. So anytime

I attend one of them I try to be prepared for just about anything. Add those considerations to the fact that this was the first time I'd ever been to the Lakewood Ranch show and you can understand my "prepare for anything" attitude. I set my GPS and headed off down the road! Once I arrived it was clear to see that Lakewood Ranch is not actually a "ranch" at all... but a nice, upscale shopping center.

I put my bug spray and fire ant killer back in the car and set out to visit all the booths.

If you've been around the show circuit in the south at all, you know Helayne Stillings and American Craft Endeavors is one of the most established names in the business and the events they sponsor are also some of the more consistent shows. Although I really didn't know exactly what to expect... it was actually a pretty good bet that the show would be a decent one. As I had said earlier though... early season does bring it's surprises! Luckily the surprises this show had were mostly all pleasant ones. I saw quite a few people who had just dusted off their display shelves and were putting the canopies up again for the first time since the spring season ended... it was nice to see so many familiar faces. Of course that usually is a good sign because it means at least quite a few of us had decided this show was well worth the risk.

The setup is pretty straight forward and the access is easy. With booths down the middle of the street back to back, it doesn't allow for a lot of understock behind the booth, but it does allow for a nice traffic flow of customers and easier access for the setup in the morning as well as teardown once the show is over. I can tell you that I've been stuck in many a traffic jam in a show at 5:00pm on Sunday. The shopping center appears to be pretty well engineered with regards to drainage too (we do have to consider rain this time of year) and with the booths in the middle of the street most of the water flow from an afternoon thunderstorm will run off to the sides rather than right down the middle of your display. This doesn't sound like a big consideration until you've been in a show where your neighbor's display ended up in your booth because it floated there! At about 4:30pm everyone in this show got a chance to test that theory!

I had a chance to talk to a significant number of exhibitors to see how they were doing and almost everyone told me they thought the show was well worth the entry fee and sales were reasonably good especially for the time of year. Although the show had primarily higher end crafts, a few fine artists could be found here and there too. The nice thing was that everything appeared to be selling... and although everyone reported Saturday's sales as better than Sunday... I saw just about every variety of work making it's way to the customer's parking area.

Most people said they would return to the show again next year so that's always the best sign of an event's success. And although exhibitors can't always agree on which promoter they like better than another... I think everyone can agree that American Craft Endeavors does know how to put on a well planned, carefully juried, thoroughly professional event and this one is no exception.

Here's another one of our early season favorites... but last year (2007) I was just about ready to give up on the show. The park was under a lot of construction with piles of dirt everywhere... the exit at the Interstate was blocked and the local radio stations were telling everyone that the festival had been cancelled. As a result attendance was mediocre at best and sales were dismal according to many of the exhibitors I had a chance to talk to. In fact in my review of the show last year I mentioned that there were quite a few factors contributing to the slow sales. The saving grace last year and of course every September, is that expectations are low so when you have a year with sub par performance it's just written off as "typical" for this time of the season.

That was the bad news last year... but here's the good news this year! The weather was great, the park was ship shape and the critical exit off of I-95 was completed. Local radio stations were spreading the news that the show was indeed happening and all was well with the world. And all the exhibitors there this year will indeed confirm that all IS well with the world of the Riverside Avondale Art Show. As I'm sure you can see by the pictures I've included in this review... the crowds showed up both Saturday and Sunday to shop and most importantly purchase the work on display. The show is primarily an art show, but there are always about 25 or so booths of quality crafts too... and everything was leaving in bags!

I spoke to a jeweler I see at shows all over the south and she told me her booth was just about sold out. I visited with a potter who told me all she had left were a few small pieces and a couple of big ones... everything else in between was gone. The photographers had done well and so had quite a few of the oil and acrylic people. I also had a chance to speak with the food vendors and they were doing better than expected as well. WOW... what a change from last year when everyone was crying the blues and ready to pack up and go home.

Of course just like the stock market, this year's sales may not be an indicator of next year's performance, but historically with the exception of last year, this show has always been well worth doing and although it seems as though sales were definitely booming this year... previous years have seen enough work leaving with shoppers that the rate of returning exhibitors is always high. With a relatively easy load in, friendly staff and decent sales throughout the years... the RAP show is considered by many to be a "traditional" season opener. Since everyone seemed to do so good this year, hopefully everything is back to normal and you'll want to consider it for your schedule next year!

While the Riverside Avondale Art Festival is a good season opener for fine art, the Deland Rivertown Festival is a nice season opener for what is normally mostly crafts. Although sales did seem a bit off this year compared to others... this festival is always well worth considering. The committee is very careful in selecting a group of quality exhibitors and the work is a nice mix so everyone has a good chance to sell. Of course like any other early season show the weather can play a critical role in the show's outcome.

Although as I said sales seemed to be a bit down this year (as in most shows this year... welcome to a slow economy) they were still steady and in fact a few exhibitors told us they had a really great show! One of the problems of being a publisher of a show guide is that the people who are having a very slow show are the ones who have plenty of time to talk to you and the exhibitors who are actually doing quite well have no time at all... so of course the impression one gets can be somewhat off as to the real results of the show. As an exhibitor chatting with other participants about events they've attended you have to be aware of the same issues. Everyone wants to tell you about the show that was a real nightmare, but they won't hardly speak a word about the event where they really cleaned up! Of course the reality is that they don't want the competition.

While we were at the show we didn't see nine out of ten people carrying work back to their cars, but it did seem as though there was a relatively steady stream of buying customers. And it was hard to lay a hand on exactly which category of work was on the way back to the area homes.

Next year when you're getting ready to dust off that canopy and break out the display for another year... you owe it to yourself to give this show a call and see if you might fit in. The fee is reasonable, the setup is easy, the sponsors always do a great job of advertising and since the location of the event is right in the middle of town you can't be missed by just about anyone passing through. Some years are always better than others... but as far as I can see... and obviously by what so many returning exhibitors can see... this is an event you'll want to give some serious consideration to including as a starter next year.

We've been advertising this show ever since it started three years ago and this is the first time we've ever been able to visit the event. Largo Central Park is a nice, easy to find park right in the center of the town of Largo. It has great exposure to main highways, plenty of parking and offers an easy load in for everyone who participates. I was only at the show for about two hours, but there did seem like a relatively steady flow of people throughout the time I was sales from people who came just to see the music, but the good thing is that most of the prospective customers who did come over to the craft section did so because they were actually interested in doing some shopping. And... although you could hear the music without a problem, the sound was far enough away so as not to be deafening all day long. I remember participating in a music/ craft show in south Florida one fall and I swear I thought I might never hear normally again. We were set up right next to the stage and I was praying for a power failure of some kind. Unfortunately it never came.

After three years this show is beginning to come along nicely although it would certainly be nice to see a few more customers in the crafts area. Charla and the group of people who sponsor the event seem to be sincerely interested in improving the show any way they can and it appears as though they may be open to suggestions. The economy being what it is, it's really a bit difficult to figure out exactly what to do to get people to spend more of their money... if you've got an idea by all means let me know! Having been to a few shows much more expensive than this one over the last few weeks I can however tell you that the turnout and the sales we're pretty respectable all things considered. Of course all of us would like to spend $60.00 for an entry fee and do $5000 in sales... but of course then we wake up and realize it was just a dream. Once you've had your first cup of coffee and sit back to assess the reality of this show I think you'll agree with me it's well worth considering for another year... and chances are it will just get better with every passing year!

there and exhibitors told me in general the sales wouldn't set the world on fire, but many said they would consider returning again next year and that's usually a pretty good sign for the event. The music portion of the show complimented the art & crafts section by being in a completely separate area of the park. The bad thing is that you don't necessarily get the advantage of impulse

We visited Thornbrook Village last year and got to the show just in time to experience the monsoon that drenched everyone... especially the booth in the inner courtyard that sits right above the main storm drain! This seems like a great location until there's a downpour. Given that the rain caused such a bust last year, we thought it would only be fair to visit again this year.

Although there were a few clouds in the sky, luckily this year the weather held off and the customers didn't forget this was a nice, worthwhile show to go and buy things! I was at the show for a few hours, but most exhibitors told me there was a steady flow of traffic throughout the two days of the event. Crowds are very difficult to estimate for this one because there are so many nooks and crannies throughout the Thornbrook Shopping Center where the show takes place. This is both an advantage and a disadvantage because certainly the shopper gets literally surrounded by all kinds of art and that's good because it gives the feeling of being an even bigger show than it actually is and it also gives the impression there are a lot more people there than they actually have. On the other hand, if a potential customer wants to find you again then that's difficult too because navigating the place when it's full of canopies and art is very difficult.

The show is clearly a fine art show...

although there weren't a lot of real expensive pieces selling that I saw. Most sales seemed to be in the low to medium price range. The people who participate fall into two distinct categories... about half are the professionals we see at events all over the south... and the other half are the people who must be either locals or members of the art league. The difference is very apparent. Many of the people set up under the eaves of the buildings didn't have professional displays and clearly didn't have much back up stock.

The obvious advantage to this show is that work does sell, respectable crowds of people do attend and shop and the selection of work is well juried without too much of any one thing. The obvious disadvantage is load in and teardown. If you happen to be one of the people with a booth located in the courtyard area or under the eaves of one of the buildings there is no easy way to get your work and display from your truck or car to the area you have to set up. Make sure to bring a good hand cart and maybe even some extra help if you've got heavy things. Another possibility is when you apply, make sure to request one of the outer areas for your booth. The bad part is you'll probably get a little less traffic than if you were in the courtyard area, but you'll also still be able to walk once teardown is complete.

In the big picture, the Thornbrook Village show is a worthwhile event to participate in and delivers a reliable event for many exhibitors. I see a lot of the same faces every year so it's clear they must be making money or they would either stay home or apply to an alternative event. I didn't see big gobs of money being spent...

but quite a few smaller amounts were being spent consistently throughout the day and the complete range of work. Pencil this one in to your tentative schedule when you're looking for an early season show around the Gainesville area.
