Thanks for being part of our family of subscribers!

When we started the concept of publishing a guide to the art & craft shows over seventeen years ago, we envisioned a book that would be the result of a vast networking of exhibitors. It wasn't to be any one person's idea of what a guide should be. After all, who knows your work and it's market better than you... the person who is "in the trenches" every week... talking to customers... listening to stories... dealing with inclement weather... tolerating unreasonable show sponsors and a whole slew of other things that it takes to succeed in this business.

Over the years we've heard many of your suggestions and if you've been a subscriber for more than just a couple of years you've seen us implement many of your ideas. We've seen this publication transform from something that resembles our flyer... into one of the more influential guides on America's eastern coast. We've grown from a circulation that included a few friends... to one that numbers in the thousands... and we're read by even more! God willing and with your support, we hope this growth continues... but most of all, we hope to continue to be one of the most useful tools you have in your quest to have your own business grow with the same good fortune we've had. Here's some information you ought to know.

HOW & WHY WE PUBLISH EVERY THREE MONTHS...

We publish four times per year... Winter, Spring, Summer & Fall. Each time we publish, we list events for up to one year in advance. The reason we do that is because in order to get into many of the larger events, you have to send your application in several months before the show to be considered. For most events though the planning is only done a few months before the event and of course we can't publish information if the event sponsor hasn't even set a date. That's why every three months or so we delete everything that's already happened and then put in all the updated information that has just become available. That's good news because most exhibitors don't have the funds to book so many events so far in advance and even if you did, the chances of being accepted to every event you apply for are minimal. Everyone's schedule usually consists of a few shows booked months in advance and then some they book only a couple weeks beforehand. Every three months you'll get a fresh batch of shows and a new opportunity to book events!

HOW THE BOOK IS ORGANIZED

The book is divided into five sections. The "Art & Crafts Showcase" is the first section. Here you'll read articles about improving your business, show reviews, advertising to help you learn more about specific events and business opportunities, show reviews, a listing of professional promoters and much more!

The second section is called "Shows At A Glance." Here you'll have the ability to see a quick overview of the shows taking place each week. They are organized first by date, then by number of days and then by city and show sponsor. You'll be able to see enough information about each show to find it in the main listing section of the guide which we'll talk about in a few moments.

The third section is the "Location Cross Reference." In this index we break down the state into seven regions, alphabetize the cities and then tell you what's happening in each city throughout the year in date order. This is handy when you'd like to find shows to participate in that are close by or if you hear about a great event in a specific city and want to find out the details.

The fourth section is named "The Shows." This is the main listing section of the guide where you'll find complete details about each event. If you've been a subscriber for very long, you'll see that we've incorporated a new organization in this section. As we've expanded the coverage of our guide, finding shows exactly where you want them has become a bit more difficult. So, for those of you who only want to participate in certain regions you'll now find all the shows separated by state... and then by dates within each state. We hope this will help you spend time looking exactly where you want to look! We also include information for select shows outside the SOUTHEASTERN area, you'll find those shows in a place by themselves as well. The idea behind the information we everyone would be creating the same thing. Luckily for all of us that isn't the case. No one could possibly participate in 3500 shows throughout the year, but by having a great number of choices at your fingertips, you stand a lot better chance of making a good match between your work and the market you'd like to exhibit in. Additionally, no one knows your work and your market better than you do and no one can make a better decision on which shows to participate in than you can. Usually if you do well at a show, you'll do well at other events that have similar characteristics. This information gives you the ability to put your knowledge to work and make informed decisions about the shows you choose.

The final section is "The Deadline Alert." If you've never missed a deadline, you probably haven't booked too many shows! We've all done it. And usually the one we've missed is an event we've been dying to try. Once again "Where The Shows Are!!!" comes to the rescue. Not every show has a deadline date, in fact many just keep taking applications until they are full. Quite a few however require that your application be received by a specified time. Here you'll find all the shows with deadlines listed first by the actual deadline date, then the date of the show and then you'll see enough brief information so that you can locate the show in the main listing section of the guide. Check this section weekly and you'll avoid the disappointment of missing the deadline date!

WHO'S RESPONSIBLE FOR WHAT?

There are almost 1400 shows listed in this issue of "WHERE THE SHOWS ARE!!!" and certainly not all of them will be right for you. Make sure you personally call the sponsor of each show you are interested in to get the most up-to-date information on that particular event.

Anyone who's been through even one season in the SOUTHEAST can tell you that summer sales can be slow. Sure there are a handfull of good shows, but the reality is that there just aren't enough to go around. That's why we expanded to the rest of the Southeast. In the new version of our guide we list over 3500 shows throughout the Florida, Georgia, Alabama, Louisiana, Mississippi and South Carolina, North Carolina and the borders of the surrounding states. Now there's no excuse for not making a living all twelve months of the year!

we'll approve you. You will then receive an email indicating you're approved. You have the opportunity to go online and check this out anytime your subscription is active. Here again we ask that you keep your password to yourself. Obviously if everyone just accessed the information without paying to get it we couldn't continue to provide the service and at that point we'd all loose out. Our system is pre-programmed to disable any accounts that show abuse or multiple logons. If you've experienced trouble with the site, just give us a call or send us an email message and we'll investigate the logs to determine the cause of the problem and then re-set your account for you. Like everyone else in our industry I'm trying to understand the economy... where our business is headed and how all of us can "weather the storm" and survive until things become "normal" again. Confidence and faith play an important role in this! The reality is that sales, the economic climate and the businesses they effect are all cyclic. These tests we all face act as a periodic "shakeout" and with those shakes the balance of power also sometimes shifts.

Even though any of us could study a bit of history and see these cycles have happened before, it doesn't make the current circumstances any more comfortable to endure. I read in the paper this morning that our government thinks we may be in "somewhat of a recession." Of course they're always the last ones to find out since taxes and other fees really insulate most of the people who make those statements. You can bet the government workers are getting their yearly raises... politicians are increasing their expense accounts... and all the businesses that depend on government for income are pretty much doing business as usual. They're smart because they've created legislation that insulates them from what all the rest of us have to endure. So when you hear someone in the government talk about "recession" it's not really an experience they have to contend with... it's mainly just lip service given to calm the populace into thinking they actually give a damn!

Because our industry is in the business of "wants" rather than "needs," we're the first to feel the impact of an economic slowdown and the usually the last to recover. In the 33 years I've managed to make a living in the arts I've seen this kind of thing before and mind though that buying and selling at events such as we participate in has been going on for thousands of years. Even Christ got in trouble with money changers at an outdoor selling event!

The question becomes not one of "will our business still be there on the backside of this recession"... as one of "how do we get through these challenging times". We obviously have to change some things about the way we do business. There may be ways we can tighten our belts a bit and not suffer too much from it. People are still earning money... and they are still spending it. Maybe not as much as they have over the past few years... but it's still there and we have to learn new ways to ensure our profitability.

STRIVE FOR VEHICLE EFFICIENCY

Lets face it, one of the largest expenses we have these days is actually getting to the show! And although we don't have any control over the price of gasoline, we do have control over how much of it we use. Here are a few ideas on how you can save on this substantial cost.

1. Economize on transportation. Ideally we'd all go out and get a brand new vehicle that gets some sort of awesome mileage. Unfortunately that isn't possible for many of us. We may however be able to downsize a bit from that big 3/4 ton truck to something a bit more modest. I know I just did that by finding a nice little S-10 pickup truck that I paid $500.00 dollars for. Although it's thirteen years old and is lacking a few of the amenities I'd like to have, it still does about 90% of the chores I used to do with my big Chevrolet Suburban and I do all that at about half the cost of fuel! Ironically, a lot of the other parts are cheaper too... things like tires, engine parts and transmissions repairs. Sure I like the "deluxe" transportation I used to enjoy... but adjustments like this are really just more practical and get you to the same show the other vehicles do. If you are downsizing although it's a bit scary... there is ultimately light at the end of the tunnel. Sometimes that light seems a bit further away that at others... but nonetheless it is there. Just as in other slowdowns that have occurred in the past we hear all this talk about complete collapse of the industry. Of course some things will collapse. I always try to keep in on your vehicle, you may consider purchasing a small trailer if you need cargo carrying capability. I've always been a fan of trailers because the use no gas or oil, are simple to maintain and repair, don't usually require much if any insurance and even the vehicle registration doesn't amount to much!

2. Drive slower. If you're like me, you're probably always pushing it to get to a show. Of course the trouble with that is speed costs money. Most of our vehicles are designed for the best mileage at about 55 or 60mph. By the way, that speed also works well when towing and although you'll definitely want to stay in the right hand lane on the interstate, the gas savings could be significant.

3. Make sure your tire pressure is correct. This simple little check can save you an unbelievable amount of gas. If your tire is rated at 32 lbs and you're actually running at about 25 lbs, it's probably costing you 10% more fuel to travel the same distance. Lately I've been actually running my tire pressure a bit higher especially when I know I'll be on smooth highways. This gives you a bit stiffer ride, but again... you can save on gas! Always make sure you read the maximum pressure your tire can hold, and don't over fill it. The results could be a blowout and any benefit you get from gas savings could be eaten up by hospital bills. Usually you'll find recommended tire pressures on the side of the driver's door too. Here you'll see a range of acceptable pressures for various driving situations.

4. Install a clean air filter. All vehicles need air to run. And if you restrict the amount of air that can reach the intake of your engine, the mixture of fuel and air can't possibly be right. The result is that you'll burn a greater amount of fuel for the same power you get if you'd had less restricted air. If you stop by an auto parts store you'll see a wide variety of filters to choose from and one of my favorite are K & N filters. These are specifically designed to provide air to the engine at the lowest restriction (thus greater mileage and more power). In addition, these filters are cleanable and reusable. You'll pay a bit more for the setup in the beginning, but in the long run there is a nice savings in fuel consumption as well as the expense of continually buying air filters.

5. Consider switching to a diesel powered vehicle. They smell a bit worse... the rattle a bit more... but there's a reason virtually every commercial truck on the road us run by a diesel engine. They get better mileage and have much lower maintenance when compared to a gasoline powered vehicle. The fuel is more expensive by about 10% to 15%, but the mileage is about 30% better in many types of trucks and cars. In addition, diesel engines can be run on either regular diesel fuel, bio-diesel or with a few modifications they can even run on used vegetable oil or rendered animal fat! They are pretty amazing devices many people don't know much about.

6. Watch your vehicle's weight! Do you really need to carry that big display you've been lugging around? I know when I was doing shows every weekend we always seemed to have a lot more supplies and excess inventory than we really needed. The truth is we got lazy... and our trailer began to be a storage shed as much as a way to get to shows. We'd get home on Sunday night and all I wanted to do was forget about packing, tearing down, driving and reorganizing. I just wanted to unhook the trailer from the truck, have a bite to eat, take a shower and go to sleep. I'd always think that on Monday or Tuesday I'd unload the trailer and go through everything... but somehow it never happened and in the blink of an eye Friday was here again. We'd just throw everything in the trailer and race down the road again! That may work at $1.50 a gallon... but it sure doesn't make sense at $4.29!

7. Consider car pooling to a show. If you do have a larger vehicle or a bigger trailer, then it might make sense to team up with someone else and share expenses. I know several people who plan on doing shows together in part just because they like the company. As long as you're doing that you may find you can "double up" on the transportation too. Even if a big truck and trailer only gets 12 miles per gallon, when you divide by two even that lousy mileage becomes 24 mile per gallon. If you get three people splitting the freight you're getting more effective mileage than most economy cars! The reality is that if we really organize ourselves properly there's no reason this can't that any partnership has to be inherently fair to succeed and these aren't. Sure the sponsors can get away with it for a while as they burn through waiting lists left over from previous years, but ultimately the new exhibitors will be faced with the same economic decisions that current exhibitors have to face.

There are also a number of events who have indicated to me that they won't have advertising money available like they've had in the past because of budget cuts and the lack of community sponsors. More than a few of these people have indicated a reliance on the internet as a way to save money. The trouble is just like the "tech bubble" of the late 90's, there is no real proof this idea will work. Unfortunately under the circumstances the only real victims of this "experiment" will be the exhibitors at the shows. In the end

SHOP FOR THE BEST SHOW

There was a time when we just automatically signed up for a show almost as soon as we were done. The costs to participate were usually way under the gross we'd done and it was just simply a no-brainer to come back the next year. Of course there still are shows like that out there and you'd be a fool not to do a repeat at an event so full of promise. On the other hand, some of the events that used to be "no-brainers," haven't continued to provide the kind of profitability they had in the past when you begin to weigh all the variables. Some events continue to increase show fees 10% to 20% every year and then add on excessive jury fees too while sales have been consistently declining for the last three or four years. Under those circumstances those raises aren't justified. After all, this is really a business partnership we've entered into with the event sponsors. Everyone knows

I think we will be able to view the internet as one more "tool in the arsenal" to attract both exhibitors and customers to shows... but the reality of promotion won't change just because people have high speed internet access. You have to approach prospects in a number of ways to ensure success.

With all this in mind, you may want to take a harder look at some of the events you may have passed by previously. You may not gross as much money in a smaller show... but you may not have the expenses either. What really counts is how much money you have in your pocket at the end of the weekend. We've been working hard here at "Where The Shows Are!!!" so that we may provide you with a much greater range of events than we ever have before so make sure to look closely at the pages of this guide.

GET AS MUCH INFORMATION AS YOU CAN

In the past you may have been able to just "take a shot" at a show. Of course there are still times when that makes sense. But with increased costs in both show fees, transportation, food, supplies and more "taking a shot" may not be a luxury all of us can afford. In the pages of our guide we spend hundreds of hours and thousands of dollars to provide the most accurate, up-to-date information we can lay our hands on about shows and we believe that's evident throughout our book. But today that isn't enough. One of the newest innovations we've offered to everyone is a network of exhibitors where you can discuss events in real time! Our social networking site at www.wheretheshowsare.net/wtsanetwork is free to all subscribers and can help provide that extra insight you may be looking for. Additionally it's a great way to get to know your fellow exhibitors. The easy exchange of information has always been a special focus here at our company and we hope this new program helps!

GIVE UP A FEW LUXURIES

This is definitely one of the toughest things to do when you have to "tighten your belt." It's so easy to get used to a more expensive lifestyle. A fancier car, a nicer home, a vacation in an exotic place... when money is flowing we can have it all! But who wants to sacrifice anything when the money faucet starts to run dry? Well the answer is simple... no one! But there are some things we can do that may not hurt too much at a show.

You'll save a fair amount of money by bringing your own food and your own drinks to a show. A $20.00 cooler will save you hundreds over the course of just one show season.

While we're on a quest to save money, maybe a new coat of paint on your existing display would work just as well as building a new one.

Wash your canopy top for a new look and a tight fit rather than buying a brand new one.

If you've got to stay in a hotel for the weekend, find one of those "Saver's Guides" and get the discount rate OR rather than staying in the local Marriot, you may find a

"mom and pop" hotel that's just as nice for a much lower price. A lot of people work out a co-op with fellow exhibitors so that they can stay in your place when they're local and you can stay in theirs when you do a show near them.

Forget about the "celebration dinner" at a fancy restaurant after a good day at the show. Sure you have plenty of money in your pocket right now, but next weekend you may need it!

Keep all your equipment for producing your work in good repair. Little problems become big disasters if you don't take care of them while they are small. Clean your brushes and store them properly... lubricate your power tools... sharpen blades... cap paints so they don't dry up. Use reusable rags rather than paper towels. The list goes on and on... and if you take a close look at the way you do things chances are you'll be able to make a long list of little ways to save.

A PENNY SAVED IS A PENNY EARNED... SURVIVING THE "SHIFTS & SHAKES"

Ok... it's an old, corny saying. But it completely true and it's never been more important than right now. If you focus on saving a little here and a little there before you know it you'll be saving big chunks of money and the reality is in most cases these saving habits will become so natural you won't even notice you're doing it. The results will be well worth it when we come out on the other side of this recession affecting us all. All of us are creative people or we wouldn't be in this business. When things start to "Shift and Shake" as they are now... we have to put that creative brain power to work making sure we survive and prosper. It's one of the most important things we can do.

restrictions can actually be more profitable in spite of the fact that sales may be lower. It doesn't matter so much what the gross sales are as much as it matters what you put in your pocket when the day is done. There are always more shows to consider... That's one of the reasons we've expanded the scope of our show guide.

As you begin to prospect all the events for next season... Give some thought to a few newer shows, maybe a promoter you haven't tried before, possibly a new location. I've heard plenty of you "cry the blues" about the shows you were part of last fall and many of you told me you were looking for change. Just remember though, nothing changes unless you change it! Don't be afraid to try something new just because it's different! After all, if things aren't satisfactory right now, a "difference" is what you want!

For many exhibitors this has been a challenging season. Sales are down somewhat... Attendances aren't what they may have been in their past...and for some, things can be a bit demoralizing. Of course it's important to realize that our industry is not the only one affected by the current economic downturn... Many other businesses have been hit by the same problems. I've already seen a few people quit the art or crafts business because of slow sales only to return a few months later after they realize things aren't much better in alternative areas of employment. The bottom line is, there is no silver bullet including a change of government that will alter the current situation quickly.

In my opinion, our best strategy is to continue to seek out events to participate in that will offer a reasonable return for our efforts and investment. These may not be the traditional events you've been doing for the last five years or so. Some shows and some sponsors will realize a downturn exists not only for the exhibitors... But for sponsors as well! They'll either have to reduce their prices, or hold the line on any increases and be happy with a smaller profit (just as many exhibitors have been doing) or watch participants go to other shows.

Bear in mind, there are times when a show with a lower fee and less demanding

I hadn't been to this show for several years. In fact, I think the last time I was there was about seven years ago. At that time the show was decent, and some people were making money but the mix of work for sale was at time somewhat questionable. From my observations that past winter, there certainly have been some clear changes not only from the standpoint of the quality of work in the show, but the attendance too.

Now I won't tell you that this is some kind of high end, juried fine art show, because it isn't. Although there is some fine art to be found, this is clearly a craft festival. I'm also not here to tell you that you won't find anything questionable here for a craft show because I definitely saw some buy sell things and of course this is a "Festival" with a craft show not a craft show with a festival. But overall, what I saw for sale was perfectly stays nice, you'll almost always find a nice crowd out and about throughout all three days of the show. In the event you don't believe me, just take a look at some of the pictures accompanying this article and let them speak for themselves.

The Olustee Battle Festival has a well earned reputation among the exhibitors who participate and from my discussions with several of them I'd guess a significant number of people return year after year. That's sure a good sign because one of the scariest things you can discover at a show is that almost everyone you talk to is a first year exhibitor.

I don't know that you'll be retiring on the sales you make at this show, but my guess is with the right product you could be joining more than 150 exhibitors who return to sell each year.

When spring rolls around, you can always count on plants in bloom, a good stiff wind at quite a few of the shows, some rather comfortable weather and the Deland Outdoor Art Festival. This year was no different but there were some differences in the show that are worth mentioning.

Tommy and his wife Patti have been talking to exhibitors over the last few years and their dedication to improving the event is obvious. The first thing you notice is that the number of exhibitors has been reduced so that the “pie” is not sliced so many ways among exhibitors. You’ll see as you walk around the booths, there is virtually no “buy/sell” at all and even more importantly very little duplication of work. For those of you who have been at shows where you’re set up right next to someone who does very similar work and then two booths down you find yet another exhibitor working in just about the same media again, you know not only how difficult sales become, but how competitive judging can be too. The new arrangements still retain a nice selection for the shoppers and instill a competitive spirit while at the same time not making either of those things a “cut throat” sort of thing I’ve seen at some shows.

Like all changes of course not everyone was happy, and some bad weather on Saturday did limit crowds a bit. But of course we also found several people who were happy with the arrangement and were looking forward to returning. No one can control the weather unfortunately and the only way to ensure you have no issues with it, are to stay home. You'll certainly limit your risk but you'll also insure your income will be zero!

The Deland Outdoor Art Show has always been a nice mix of fine art & crafts. It's an easy setup, there are indoor bathrooms for exhibitors, the staff of the show goes out of their way to make sure you're taken care of and if you're a fine artist, they offer decent prize money too!

Although none of us have a crystal ball and any change of plans has an unknown outcome in the long run, there's no doubt the hard work and dedication Tommy, Patti and the entire staff put into this show will mean a successful event with plenty of profit for everyone.

I'd have to classify our industry's current situation as "changing times." Some of the shows you've counted on for years are falling on their face while at the same time the fees keep rising. On the other hand we've found some real sleepers that we may have never considered in the past. That was just what we found at the Lakeland Spring Fling.

When I arrived at the event there didn't seem to be any particularly outstanding crowd like I saw at the Olustee Battle Festival and so you can imagine I was expecting to hear a lot of complaints from exhibitors. It was a pleasant surprise when exhibitor after exhibitor kept telling me what a nice little show this was and how sales were actually fairly good. One exhibitor who has been doing this event for several years actually calls it one of his "most closely guarded secret shows." Oops, did I let that cat out of the bag? Well partly I guess.

The customers do come to buy. And they do a pretty good job of it too as probably 75% or so were carrying bags. That's good because the attendance wasn't all that high. Windy conditions and cold weather were partly to blame. And what were they buying? Well since this is a plant show combined with a craft show the things I saw leaving the park mostly were either live plants or crafts supporting that interest. I'd definitely consider participating if I made something that could be used in a garden or something plant oriented. The show does bring buyers and they do spend a fair amount of money but the focus of sales is rather limited. Keep early February is the Country Craft Fair.

As you might think, the name says it all. This is a real nice, down home sort of local fair that draws shoppers from all over the central, south part of the state. Personally I've been to this show as both an exhibitor and as a show guide editor more times than I can count. The people who participate and the customers who shop are always some of the most pleasant and downright nice folks you'll meet anywhere. I guess that's part of what keeps so many exhibitors coming back to the show year after year.

The show directors have come and gone, but somehow year after year this is one of the most consistent events you'll put on your schedule. I remember the first time we ever participated in the show in about 1991. We had set up the day before and since there really aren't a lot of hotels in Lake Placid, we were staying at the Jacaranda in Avon Park. What a neat old hotel... and at the time I remember we were able to get an entire suite

(yes there were five kids along with us too) for just $85.00 per night! What a deal! The morning of the show all of us were excited because just as the show began we were mobbed with customers. It was one of our best shows to date at the time. Of course over the years we've seen a few slow events too... one year it was really cold... another year we had quite a bit of rain on a Saturday... but somehow we always made money and looked forward to coming back the next year. This past year saw beautiful weather and a really decent attendance. Talking to quite a few exhibitors I certainly got the impression that sales were decent this season too.

This is definitely a country craft show and it would be a mistake to bring anything else. You'll also find a nice food court, pony rides and a few other kids activities. Just enough to entertain the kids without having mom & dad part with every last nickel they brought to the show! Sales are mostly moderate priced items... but don't be fooled, there are some local residents who have money and are willing to spend it. I've always found that this is a good show to bring along at least a few higher end things. You've got a real diverse customer base with a combination of retiree's living in a few of the surrounding trailer parks, the Caladium Farm owners (who by the way are the ones with plenty of money), and then of course some of the local workers at the farms and other small businesses near by.

If you're a craftsman, and you live anywhere within a reasonable distance of Lake Placid then this is an event you really owe it to yourself to consider for early February. With the right work to sell I think you'll be quite pleased you made the drive and participated in the show.

It's been a while since I've been at a Broken Mold show, so when I saw the spring St. Augustine show happening, I thought I'd stop by and see how things were going. Just about everyone who sponsors a show in the St. Augustine area seems to do it in the same location ever since the city obviously banned shows from the main square in the downtown area. At first some of the shows really suffered because the events took place so far from the normal paths of tourists who generally play a critical role in sales. Now that a new parking garage has been built right next to the special events field, it's breathed new life back into the art and crafts shows taking place in this location.

I've always felt that Dick & Joan did a good job of selecting quality work for their shows, but they've really outdone themselves here. I haven't seen work this good at a St. Augustine show in quite some time. It was obvious the customers were picking up on that too because I was pleased to hear quite a few of the exhibitors were doing quite well. There was a nice mix of some moderately priced fine art along with some quality crafts and everything seemed to be selling in about equal quantities. I watched the customer traffic over about a two hour period on a Sunday afternoon and I'd estimate that probably about three in ten people left the show with at least one purchase in hand... that's a pretty good ratio!

Dick & Joan do a nice job of promoting their shows and that can be a real challenge in St. Johns County where they have some pretty restrictive ordinances (although I don't think anyone beats Sarasota County). One thing that really helps any show taking place in the special events field is that as long as the weather is decent... you'll usually have at least a decent crowd of prospective customers. And as I mentioned... that new parking garage is a real help. Parking in St. Augustine has always been a nightmare so I'll bet about 80% of all the people who visit the historic downtown area, also pass through this garage right next to the events field.

None of us have a crystal ball to see into the future so it's difficult to see what might happen in a future show... but this one was a definite winner for 2008!

It's All Up to You!

By Dan Lewis

Life is what we make it. By our actions, our work, our dedication and the choices we make we either prosper or fail... lead happy lives or wallow in despair... leave a lasting impression on family, friends and customers or fall short of the expectations others have for us. All this makes us realize how important the choices we make can be. But luckily for all of us, every day is a new opportunity to start over again... and when we hear the rooster crowing as the sun comes up, it signals once again we have a chance to change the outcome of our lives because... "It's all up to you!"

There has never been a better time to rededicate yourself to quality work, a great show schedule, excellent customer relations and an optimistic marketing plan that will take you into the next season. Quit reading the newspaper, turn off the TV, keep a good

CD in your car's sound system... don't let yourself become a "victim" of the media onslaught of bad economy and crumbling business morality. You have the opportunity to make this world and this country a better place for yourself, your family and the peoples lives you touch by your very presence. This is the attitude that allows you to become one of the basic building blocks of our economy and will ultimately result in better sales along with a better life.

I really don't advocate total isolation from reality and current events, but sometimes these things can distract you from what has made you successful in the past and what will continue to feed your success in the future. Especially in tight economic times people will look for quality, service and the best value for the money they choose to spend. That doesn't always translate into the cheapest thing money can buy... because value is not defined by price alone, but by the relation of price to functionality or quality of the item you're buying. Your attitude toward the creation of the work you sell adds heavily to the functionality and quality part of this equation, allowing the price to rise and the "value" factor to remain a constant! We can't compete with a bunch of third world countries where people work for $1.00 per day so it's obvious that we won't be selling our work based on price. In fact, over the years I've know several exhibitors who thought price was the answer. They would work their fingers to the bone trying to produce a great quantity of items for sale. They set time limits on a per item basis in a futile attempt to match machines and cheap overseas labor. A few years later, disillusioned and out of business they're back to working the 9 to 5 they so desperately wanted to leave behind. Price is not the answer.

To illustrate this point even further, I'll tell you a little something I tell potential advertisers here in our publication. What you spend for advertising is only "cheap" or "expensive" relative to the results that expenditure produces. A $25.00 classified ad represents a minimal cash outlay. If that ad doesn't even attract one customer then you paid way too much money. But if a $400.00 display ad draws in 100 customers, then that may have actually been one of the cheapest ads you ever spent money to purchase! Regardless of what we sell, it's our job as "sellers" to demonstrate to customers the "value" of the item we're trying to promote. Price can rise relative to value. The extent to which the disparity between price and results exists usually determines the difficulty with which the sale is made. There are some other factors to consider though when establishing price. If you get too low on the price range and the quality or functionality is extremely high in relation, then people tend to think something is wrong and sales will drop. Conversely, when the price is extremely high in relation to the quality or functionality, a certain percentage of the prospective buyers will purchase the work anyway because they feel they must be missing something that justifies such a high price. It's always nice to find this kind of buyer and it's the reason you must have a wide range of prices in your booth so you don't miss out one they people when the come along. Occasionally the price on some products rise dramatically as a result of this phenomenon... usually the backside is that those prices drop just as quickly as soon as customers realize they've been had. Beannie Babies are a great example of this type of situation.

Defining the business situation into which you'd like to put yourself is again, all up to you. Creating a situation where "price is king" leaves you in an extremely vulnerable position. You may be selling like mad, but when you take a breather to examine your bottom line profit, you may not like what you see. In addition to that one major problem,

This includes things like signage, brochures, advertising, catalogs etc. Sales will then use the support products that marketing creates as tools to help make the sale. In our business the line between sales and marketing blurs because for us, like many small businesses, we generally do it all anyway and sometimes we make up our sales tools (ie. marketing stuff) as we go along. Since most of us are on a limited budget, when you're creating your marketing materials make sure not to waste money on things that will never be used or expensive promotional stuff like free giveaways, pens, hats and other paraphernalia like that. Although these type of items might create sales "down the road" at some point, they will probably do next to nothing right now and they cost a bunch to provide. Remember, we aren't State Farm Insurance or Texaco Oil so why try to compete on the same plain. Marketing materials are an essential part of sales, but keep it lean and to the point. We can buy the "fluff" later once we're rich and famous. Also, remember... marketing materials generally won't make the sale... you do! Those materials are only there to support the effort and should only be used when you need them. Once the customer has agreed to buy the item, take their money, bag up the item they wanted and move on to the next customer. Don't load them up with a bunch of stuff they probably don't want, things that cost you a bundle and something they'll probably throw away once they leave your sight.

Customer service is also your responsibility. Just as we have the opportunity to choose our customers, our customers have the ability to choose the exhibitors with whom they do business. Often times at an event, shoppers will see high quality, similar work from booth to booth. The reality is you'll be faced sooner or later with someone who thinks he or she can sell even cheaper. As a reaction you'll see if there's a way to cut your price... next you're cutting quality... then customers drop off... next thing you know you're back working for someone else again. If on the other hand you create a situation where quality and workmanship are of the absolute utmost importance you'll be creating a product only a few others can come close to. Sure the price will be higher than the competition, but here's where we get back to that good old value equation. You guessed it, the value is higher too so you can command a much greater price. In the process you create customer loyalty, repeat business and a long term relationship with your customer that lasts as long as you'd like to perpetuate it. Furthermore when someone tries to undercut your price... just let them. If you know in your heart that what you are creating involves the utmost care and craftsmanship or creativity and is fairly priced you know the fate of that guy who's trying to win customers on price... remember him, he's the guy that's working that 9 to 5 right now!

Effective marketing is also "up to you". For the longest time I had a difficult time understanding marketing as opposed to sales. They do after all have the same result... moving product. The difference is that marketing supports sales by creating an environment in which sales can take place.

that by the time you've made it through the jurying process chances are your work has a definite appeal. So what is it that causes a customer to buy from one exhibitor and not another? Often it boils down to the interaction between the two people attempting to transact business. All other things being equal, a good many people buy from you because they like you. Liking you is influenced heavily by the way you treat the customer. This doesn't mean you should shower the customer with insincere flattery or other butt kissing techniques, but that you should express a sincere desire to meet the customer's need, ensure their satisfaction and do whatever you can to make the experience dealing with you as pleasant as possible. Think about the way you'd like to be treated in a sales situation and act accordingly. Although occasionally you'll find someone for whom you can do nothing, most of the time with a little patience, compromise and good will you can create a very satisfying long term situation for both of you even if their have been problems or disagreements. Real customer service starts the moment someone walks into your booth. You set the attitude they leave with and it's important to instill a positive attitude whenever possible.

Keep a positive attitude with all your business dealings. Here at "Where The Shows Are !!!" we like to create a "win - win" sort of situation for subscribers, advertisers and us. Your business should do the same. By doing this we also do everything we can to maintain and promote a positive business situation. An upbeat, can-do attitude is always apparent to the customer and it's infectious. People like dealing with someone who greets them with a sincere smile, answers questions and listens to them. Not only does the customer feel better, you do too... which makes the whole show experience more fun! Negativity takes ten times the effort as does a positive attitude. Days seem like hours and hours seem like minutes when you're having a good time. Conversely, the day just seems to be an endless drag when your attitude is in the dumpster. A bad attitude can result in serious health problems, a shorter life (although it may seem long), and a severe lack of friends. The choice to have a great, fun business or a miserable existence is up to you. Even the worst adversity can be turned to advantage with the right attitude. Looking at the same situation in life some people see obstacles and others just see detours to opportunity... the reality is the same, but the perception is up to you!

We're a truly lucky group of people. With each sunrise, each of us has the opportunity to choose the kind of day we have, the kind of business we'll create, the friends we make and the impression we leave on the world in which we live. It matters much more where we intend to direct our lives and our business than where we've been in the past and the future is the only place where we can affect change. Keep your eyes on the horizon, let the past be the past and set your sights on being the very best you can be. The reality is... it's all up to you!
