Get Your Subscription Renewal FREE !!!

HERE'S HOW IT WORKS...

Once you've purchased our book, you can receive a $5.00 credit toward your renewal for every person you recommend to us, who also subscribes for a full year. To qualify, the person subscribing must send us a subscription form with your name on it along with payment. Additionally, the person subscribing must be a new applicant and have never purchased our book in the past. In the event of any discrepancy as to who gets the credit, the decision of our management staff will be binding & final.

In this guide you'll find several subscription referral forms. Feel free to copy them as much as you'd like or ask us for additional copies. Make sure to put your name on the form. Once we receive payment, we'll credit your account with the $5.00. Send us just eight people who subscribe... and your renewal is FREE !!! It's that simple. If you have any questions, just call us and ask. Otherwise, start working toward your subscription renewal right away !!!

Thanks for being part of our family of subscribers!

When we started the concept of publishing a guide to the art & craft shows over seventeen years ago, we envisioned a book that would be the result of a vast networking of exhibitors. It wasn't to be any one person's idea of what a guide should be. After all, who knows your work and it's market better than you... the person who is "in the trenches" every week... talking to customers... listening to stories... dealing with inclement weather... tolerating unreasonable show sponsors and a whole slew of other things that it takes to succeed in this business.

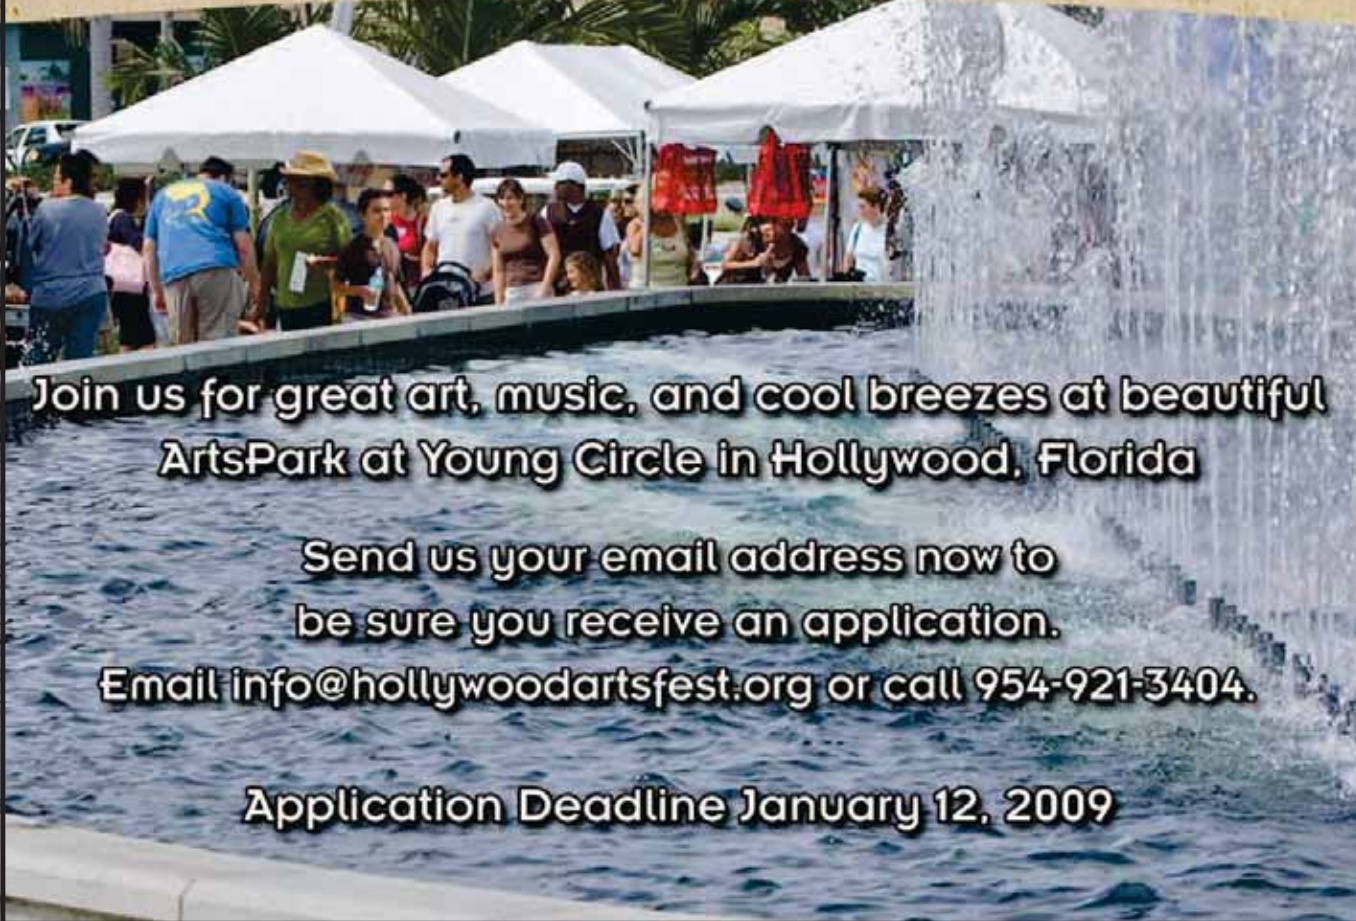

Over the years we've heard many of your suggestions and if you've been a subscriber for more than just a couple of years you've seen us implement many of your ideas. We've seen this publication transform from something that resembles our flyer... into one of the more influential guides on America's eastern coast. We've grown from a circulation that included a few friends... to one that numbers in the thousands... and we're read by even more! God willing and with your support, we hope this growth continues... but most of all, we hope to continue to be one of the most useful tools you have in your quest to have your own business grow with the same good fortune we've had. Here's some information you ought to know.

HOW & WHY WE PUBLISH EVERY THREE MONTHS...

We publish four times per year... Winter, Spring, Summer & Fall. Each time we publish, we list events for up to one year in advance. The reason we do that is because in order to get into many of the larger events, you have to send your application in several months before the show to be considered. For most events though the planning is only done a few months before the event and of course we can't publish information if the event sponsor hasn't even set a date. That's why every three months or so we delete everything that's already happened and then put in all the updated information that has just become available. That's good news because most exhibitors don't have the funds to book so many events so far in advance and even if you did, the chances of being accepted to every event you apply for are minimal. Everyone's schedule usually consists of a few shows booked months in advance and then some they book only a couple weeks beforehand. Every three months you'll get a fresh batch of shows and a new opportunity to book events!

Behind the fountain, a group of people are gathered under several large white event tents. The people are dressed in casual summer attire. The background shows more trees and a clear sky.

HOW THE BOOK IS ORGANIZED

The book is divided into five sections. The "Art & Crafts Showcase" is the first section. Here you'll read articles about improving your business, show reviews, advertising to help you learn more about specific events and business opportunities, show reviews, a listing of professional promoters and much more!

The second section is called "Shows At A Glance." Here you'll have the ability to see a quick overview of the shows taking place each week. They are organized first by date, then by number of days and then by city and show sponsor. You'll be able to see enough information about each show to find it in the main listing section of the guide which we'll talk about in a few moments.

The third section is the "Location Cross Reference." In this index we break down the state into seven regions, alphabetize the cities and then tell you what's happening in each city throughout the year in date order. This is handy when you'd like to find shows to participate in that are close by or if you hear about a great event in a specific city and want to find out the details.

The fourth section is named "The Shows." This is the main listing section of the guide where you'll find complete details about each event. If you've been a subscriber for very long, you'll see that we've incorporated a new organization in this section. As we've expanded the coverage of our guide, finding shows exactly where you want them has become a bit more difficult. So, for those of you who only want to participate in certain regions you'll now find all the shows separated by state... and then by dates within each state. We hope this will help you spend time looking exactly where you want to look! We also include information for select shows outside the SOUTHEASTERN area, you'll find those shows in a place by themselves as well. The idea behind the information we present here is to give you enough information about each event to see if it meets your criteria for an event you'd like to participate in. Since the very nature of our work is so unique, what works best for one exhibitor may be a terrible situation for another. After all, if the same thing worked for everyone, there would only be a handful of shows each week and everyone would be creating the same thing. Luckily for all of us that isn't the case. No one could possibly participate in 3500 shows throughout the year, but by having a great number of choices at your fingertips, you stand a lot better chance of making a good match between your work and the market you'd like to exhibit in. Additionally, no one knows your work and your market better than you do and no one can make a better decision on which shows to participate in than you can. Usually if you do well at a show, you'll do well at other events that have similar characteristics. This information gives you the ability to put your knowledge

The final section is "The Deadline Alert." If you've never missed a deadline, you probably haven't booked too many shows! We've all done it. And usually the one we've missed is an event we've been dying to try. Once again "Where The Shows Are!!!" comes to the rescue. Not every show

WHO'S RESPONSIBLE FOR WHAT?

There are almost 1500 shows listed in this issue of "WHERE THE SHOWS ARE !!!" and certainly not all of them will be right for you. Make sure you personally call the sponsor of each show you are interested in to get the most up-to-date information on that particular event.

Our listings come from a wide variety of sources and we do everything possible to be as accurate as possible. However because we are human, we make mistakes once in a while and we can not assume responsibility for any inconveniences this may cause. However if you let us know of any discrepancies, we will correct the error in our next issue. No matter how hard we try, there are some shows that we miss, and don't include in our guide. And it never fails, that as soon as we print an issue, someone calls us with a show we never even thought of. Remember this guide is designed to be of a benefit to all who use it. So if you see missing shows, please let us know and we'll verify all the details and include it in our next issue. Your help, will help a great many others!!! We'd also like to ask you to be fair with yourself and with us... Since the intent of our guide is for individuals to use for the express purpose of investigating arts and craft shows per se, any other use, copying, reproduction in any way or selling of the information we provide is strictly illegal without the express written permission of "Where The Shows Are !!!"

Whether you've purchased a quarterly or an annual subscription, you can always add to your subscription by just sending a check to: WHERE THE SHOWS ARE

Our rates are $49.95 for a year (four issues published quarterly Winter, Spring, Summer & Fall of each year.)

Celebrating Contemporary Craft for 11 Years!

Florida Craftsmen's annual celebration of American crafts will, for the first time, be held outdoors in beautiful downtown St. Petersburg on the crossroads in front of Florida Craftsmen Gallery. We are proud to announce that Judy Lynn Prince has accepted our invitation to jury CraftArt 2008. Ms. Prince chaired the 2000 Smithsonian Craft Show - Crafts for the Millenium and served on its committee since 1996. Prince will award $15,000 in cash. As always, CraftArt will welcome some of the nation's finest fine craft artists. This year is a not-to-be missed opportunity to visit with artists and collectors.

Obviously if everyone just accessed the information without paying to get it we couldn't continue to provide the service and at that point we'd all loose out. Our system is pre-programmed to disable any accounts that show abuse or multiple logons. If you've experienced trouble with the site, just give us a call or send us an email message and we'll investigate the logs to determine the cause of the problem and then re-set your account for you. You'll also receive emails from us occasionally when there is important new information we feel would be valuable to you. Normally when we send a message you'll see "Where The Shows Are!!!" in the subject line. If you have spam filters it would be a good idea to set them properly so that you'll get the full value for your subscription dollars! If you do change your current email address please let us know right away so we can adjust our records.

We also provide a social networking website. This service is a cooperative effort between our staff and readers. We provide feedback on current shows and other concerns and we ask you to submit your experiences as well. You'll also find this is a great chance for you to get rid of things you no longer need for your work or to maybe find just what you're looking for in the way of a used canopy or tool you've been looking for. Did you ever notice how some people seem to accomplish mountains of things in the same time another would only do one or two things? We all know that a minute is a minute... and hour is an hour... and a day is a day... but our perception of time is a relative thing and too many times we just let it slip away. Sometimes a man on his death bed would pay any price to have an extra day or two, or even an extra hour. All of us may be in that situation at some time and it's with that thought in mind we must realize how important it is to do everything we can to make every moment count. The speed at which time passes is a relative event not a constant thing. Waiting to be old enough for your driver's license when you're 15 seems to take an unbearable amount of time... but the older you get every year goes by so fast it's hard to believe the time was even there. No person has more time than the other, it's just in the way that time is used.

Knowing all this and the relative nature of time, it becomes imperative to harness time and make it our friend. In business, like other aspects of life, "harnessing" the time is really a matter of planning and prioritizing. Getting the most out of life is a whole subject on it's own... and I'm not sure I really have the answer yet, but getting more out of the time you spend on your business is really a matter of taking some common sense practical steps.

marketing type company where the primary concern is volume of merchandise. But not every production shortcut necessarily leads to poor quality... in fact many times the exact opposite takes place. For example, if you're making 50 "widgets" that all require a stripe of white paint across the middle, you could line all of them up on a table and do all 50 stripes at the same time. Or you may need to spray paint everything black... how much better to do them all at once. Maybe you could make some sort of jig that would hold your work in

for instance you wouldn't usually consider turning your own dowels when you could buy them for 50 cents each. Of course these are very obvious type of shortcuts, but usually a careful analysis of the way you produce your work will yield a tremendous amount of ideas that could significantly reduce the amount of production time while having no effect on the quality of the work.

2. Avoid distractions. How many times have you started a project just to be interrupted ten times. Each one of those interruptions cost you not only the actual time to do whatever "side task" is required, but also the "up" and "down" time associated with each incident. If you're painting and someone asks you to run them to the grocery store you can't just lay down the brush and go... not unless you want to throw it away when you get back! And while you're at it, how about all the other perishable items you use? They all have to be capped properly or stored in the right way or they'll go to waste. Then of course you have to prepare to work again when you return and that could steal tons of precious time.

self-employment. Your situation is really no different than that of someone punching the clock. No work, no pay! The only thing is everyone who isn't self-employed doesn't understand that and usually thinks work time is "play time!" They would never think of running errands or doing laundry or the dishes while they were on the clock at work, but it's fine for you! One of the most difficult tasks we face as an artist or craftsman is convincing those around us that this isn't a hobby, but a business. Although we certainly have somewhat more flexibility than the average guy, we still have an obligation to ourselves to work... and there is no one to cover for us if we don't.

Make sure to set aside regular hours where you have no priority but to work on your projects and let everyone know that this is YOUR time. If you don't do that you'll look back on the week and it will have simply disappeared with nothing accomplished... just like cash in your pocket, you'll have no idea where it went.

3. Keep and inventory supplies. What could be worse than getting in the middle of a project just to find out you don't have the right size screw... or the right color of paint... or the proper brush for the effect you need? And running around collecting these things at the last minute is extremely time consuming as well as expensive. Certainly you can't anticipate every last need and occasionally a little "running around" is necessary, but for the most part you do know most of the necessities and keeping a good supply on hand will save you countless hours.

Here's where a little organization pays off. By keeping everything in a predetermined place you can usually see at a glance what things you're running low on. Keep a clipboard with a "to order" list on it and once you notice something that is half gone for instance write it down. It's not enough to just "keep it in mind" because with so many other concerns life puts in our face we can't always depend on memory alone. Don't wait until the supply is completely gone because if you do you'll be out of production until you can find the component or you'll pay through the nose to get it. I've found that for me the half way mark is a good time to re-order on things I use continuously because by the time I get around to ordering and allow for shipping I'm usually as low as I want to be. Also, consolidate orders. Most of the time if you order several things at once from a single supplier you'll save a bunch on shipping and handling charges as a bonus.

4. Pack your finished product as you complete it. Here's another organizational tip that will save you lots of grief. There was a time when I would just keep a pile of something in one corner... a pile of something else in another... a few of these over here and a few of those over there! That's all well and good, but the trouble is that you have no idea of what you've really produced and "this and that" are laying all over "here and there" after a couple of weeks of working. Plus, when it comes time to pack for a show there's never enough time. No matter how long you think it's going to take you to put everything in bins or racks, pack up the display, hook up the trailer, gas up the vehicle and make the coffee... it always takes longer than you ever anticipated. If you've got everything all set to go as you complete it there's one less worry on the day of setup. AND, since you've kept a running total of each thing you have there's no question of what your understock will be. When a customer asks for a green whatzit instead of the pink one you have on display you'll know right away and you can make a sale rather than an excuse! Packing for unpacking takes some thinking and experience, but the payoff is well worth the planning time spent.

5. Keep your tools maintained. It's a lot harder to work with a dull saw blade than a sharp one... a clean paint gun versus a clogged one... a dry brush rather than one sitting in paint thinner. I know this sounds like basic information, but a lot of times the "basics" are some of the biggest time killers! This regular maintenance of the tools and machines you use every day pays big dividends in both the quality and the speed of your work. You know it takes a few minutes to sharpen your saw blades for instance... and that does delay the work you're doing. But how much sanding will you save because you have a clean cut? The same thing holds true with every piece of equipment you own. In virtually every case the time you spend on sharpening, oiling, cleaning, tightening screws, adjusting tolerances and so forth will provide you with higher quality work in a much shorter time span. And when you do the math, the time you spend maintaining will be worth many times the time spent with the frustration of not doing it.

6. Keep yourself maintained. Of all the resources you have, the most important one is you! We all tend to take this for granted and I know that I'm part of that club too. The reality is though, that you can only beat up what god gave you for so long before you start to see the effects. Chances are you may spend more time maintaining your car than you do maintaining your own body. Make sure you eat right, get the proper levels of nutrition, don't skip any meals, drink plenty of fluids, get enough rest every night, have at least an annual checkup with your doctor and exercise regularly. I know I sound like some sort of health nut when I say all these things and I wish I were perfect at all this too, but you should at least set a goal for yourself to try your best to meet these ideals.

A while back I discovered a web site at www.fitday.com that really helps track your progress at maintaining physical well being. If you have internet access take a look and see what they have to offer... it's free!

I'm still working on the "get the most out of life" plan. Just like everyone else I've let a lot of time slip through my fingers. Getting older and having all that time slip by is a natural thing... and of course a lot better than the alternative! When I turned 50 a few years ago, I was feeling a little blue about being officially "old". I remember when I turned 40 that everyone said I should be feeling a "mid life crisis" but I didn't feel that way at all. I was in the midst of running a relatively new business, raising three kids and to tell you the truth I didn't have time to have a "mid life crisis". In my 50's though things are different. The kids are pretty much grown up, the business is proceeding nicely, I have time to take a breath and notice I don't always have to be in a rush to take someone somewhere or spend every waking moment I'm not making a living to do laundry, prepare meals or do any one of a million things it takes to move kids from childhood to adulthood. No matter what our age and no matter which birthday is on the horizon, we owe it to ourselves, our businesses, our families and all the other people we love to try to harness time and extract the very best we can out of every moment we live. The time has come to put "time on your side!"

Getting The Most From Your 10'X10'

By Dan Lewis

I've written that space size down so many times over the years that I swear my fingers can do it all by themselves! 10'X10' is clearly the standard of the industry. Of course any show sponsor who has actually mapped out true 10'X10' spaces certainly has had to do a whole bunch of adjusting on show day because hardly anyone's booth is really that regimented size. I remember doing a show in the early 90's where the sponsor had actually made the mistake of putting one booth right next to another and making no particular allowances for error. The show was a sell-out and each row had about 25 booths in it. You can imagine the confusion during setup when there was no room for the last two booths in each row! The moral of that story is... "Always allow at least an extra foot or two for each booth." I've given that advice to so many novice show sponsors its unbelievable!

Now that we've determined we actually have 10'X10' to work with, what can we do with it? There are two basic ideas we can start with... either the inverted "U" shape where customers walk into the booth, or the "U" shape where customers walk around the outside of the booth. Part of the decision which affects your setup is the kind of work you do. Someone like a jeweler may want to use the "U" with glass cases because customers can see the work but access is only from the back. In a situation like this you only want customers to have access to the merchandise when you choose to let them because it's worth a lot of money and would be easy to shoplift! On the other hand, in a situation where you have larger pieces such as pottery, painting, and many crafts it's important to interact closely with the customer and it's advantageous to incorporate the sense of touch. In this case, the inverted "U" may be the best type of set up and larger pieces of work are more difficult to shoplift than something like jewelry. I know all this talk about shoplifting sounds a bit unusual... but as our economy gets tighter you can't afford to lose work to a thief and there are a lot more thieves than one might normally find at an art or craft show.

If all things are equal and you could make a choice between the two basic setup styles, my personal preference would be the inverted "U" where the customer walks into the booth. I think there are several advantages to this shape. First of all in a crowded show the customer can step away from the crowd and spend some time shopping without having to endure the hassle of being pushed and shoved as others pass by. Another aspect of this arrangement is purely psychological in that the customer is coming into your "shop" when they step inside your booth. This simple fact gives you the "home team" advantage because they are coming into your territory rather than you infringing on theirs. Secondly this arrangement gives you a greater amount of surface area to display on. In fact, depending on your merchandise you may be able to run another display area down the center of your booth. Putting work on both sides of that extra wall almost doubles the size of your display.

Once you've decided on the basic arrangement of your display it's time to start adding in some things that will make is even more useful and appealing. One of the biggest mistakes I see novice exhibitors making is to forget about all the vertical space they have. You'll see them set up folding tables along the edges of the canopy and they proceed to lay everything out flea market style. Certainly this works, but you lose probably 75% of the potential display area and the customer's eyes only go one place. If the show is crowded, passersby won't even be able to see what you have for sale because their view will be blocked by the other shoppers. Use the vertical space whenever you can and there are numerous ways this space offers distinct advantages. There are quite a few ways to achieve more vertical space in your booth.

You can buy commercially made panels. They look great, they're self supporting and they'll last for years. Unfortunately they are also fairly expensive. You could also make your own panels for the walls and maybe down the center. I've seen some of these that look every bit as good as the commercial ones, but then again I've seen some that look just plain terrible. You'll want to make an honest assessment of what yours look like when they're completed. We only have one chance to make a first impression on a customer and most of us want that impression to be good. Whether you choose commercial panels or make them yourself, these panels can be made from a wide range of materials. Sometimes exhibitors use a frame of wood and chicken wire stretched across it (this gives you incredible flexibility to hang things of all sizes. I've also seen PVC pipes with wires stretched from top to bottom or even vinyl lattice within the frame. Of course you can always use pegboard too. Whatever you do, make sure it's light enough to carry (remember you may have to set these things up yourself some day), make certain it's durable because it will have to endure all kinds of weather, thousands of miles and a multitude of different setups, and make sure it can be cleaned because bad weather... a muddy setup site or a moldy trailer are almost inevitable.

The panel idea is a good one, but you don't have to be limited to this. You can use lots of other “props” to achieve vertical space too. I’ve seen exhibitors use a set of stairs, an arrangement of wooden crates, used displays from stores, a hutch, a set of drawers, a dresser with a mirror and just about anything else you can imagine. The main point here is to draw attention to your exhibit while at the same time expanding you display area you have to work with.

If you’re lucky (or pay more money in some cases) you can get a corner booth. I’ve always come prepared for this if I happen to get one because now you can exhibit both on the inside and the outside of your booth. This effectively doubles your vertical space and if you have a lot of work to display it may be worth paying extra for. In any case make sure you’re prepared to use it if good fortune smiles on you and you get it for free! I’ve seen some shows that use this corner arrangement as a selling point because the booths are set up in groups of four so everyone has at least one additional corner and thus more display area. Unfortunately if the booths are positioned exactly back to back it also limits the area behind your booth for supplies, understock and yourself. It’s always nice to make friends with your neighbors here so all of you can maximize the advantage you’ve been given.

Now that we’ve achieved our maximum display area, let’s take a look at some other ways we can draw and hold the attention of customers. I mentioned props a few moments ago and how they could be used to achieve more vertical space in your booth, but just as importantly they can be used to draw attention to the booth. When you look down the rows of a show it just looks just like a sea of canopies each one identical to the next. Although the work is unique... there is nothing else to distinguish each exhibitor. Of course some shows require that to be the look and at that point there is nothing you can do to the outside of your booth. But the inside could be an entirely different story. Creating an interesting environment for the customer to shop within is a marketing technique as old as the hills... and one we shouldn't leave unaddressed! I've seen people use old Coke crates in their booth, antique farm machinery and implements, carpets for the floor, professional jewelers cases, bales of hay, barn boards for vertical accents, wall paper, mirrors, kitchen cabinets, posters, candles, fog machines... you name it and it's probably been used. The whole idea here is to create a visual effect that causes the customer to slow down and take a look at what you have for sale. If you have a situation where there is no limitation to what the outside of your booth looks like, you can let your imagination run wild here too. I've seen displays that have resembled boats, shacks, restaurants, animals and just about any other thing you can imagine. In all these cases, the props have become an integral part of the overall marketing plan and it can be very effective! Even if customers don't enter into your space with the intention of buying, many times they'll ultimately wind up buying something just because they get caught up on the excitement you've created with the props you've selected.

Invest in side curtains. Not only do they provide protection from the elements, they can go a long way toward eliminating problems with an obnoxious neighboring exhibitor or another booth that causes distractions. It allows you to focus on the objective of getting the customer to buy and gives the customer the same opportunity to focus exclusively on your work! Some of the best side curtains I've seen are made from high quality fabric and even include a screen that can be revealed by zippers. If you're simply trying to stay out of the elements just about anything will do. I've seen exhibitors use everything from shower curtains to tarps to plastic sheets and they all work to some extent. The first time you're in a serious rainstorm though, you'll be congratulating yourself over and over when you've spent the money to buy a high quality side. And if that investment keeps you from losing work you've spent weeks creating, the cost will seem minimal at that point.

Make sure the lighting is the best you can achieve. At many events a white canopy is your only choice because it's what the show requires. But even if this is not a requirement of the show, it usually makes a lot of sense. Whenever you choose another color there is always a "cast" of that color on all your work. I remember starting off with a green and white canopy at one time. It seemed like a good idea because we could always tell the customers who were going to return (have you ever actually met many of those anyway?) that all they had to do was look for the green and white top! When we actually set up though... you couldn't even tell what we intended the true color of our work to be. Everything had a green tint to it. Needless to say, we went to white shortly thereafter. Certainly this demonstrates the quality of lighting is extremely important, but quantity of light can play an important role too. The shade of a nearby tree may keep you cooler during the day... but you'll pay a price because the colors of work in your booth won't be as vibrant as those in the booths who have more direct sunlight. If you participate in a show at night, you'll want to have the brightest lights you can stand! Those lights will not only show off all the colors and brilliance of your work... they'll attract customers too. I've always noticed that customers are attracted to lights at night with just about the same intensity as mosquitoes! Sure it may be a little uncomfortable for you, but the extra money you'll make will compensate you for the inconvenience. Depending on your product, it may almost always be worthwhile investing in supplemental lighting. It can add that extra glimmer to your jewelry... provide the right exposure for your painting... or highlight the nuances of your country crafts. Proper and adequate lighting can be an extremely effective marketing tool. One word of caution though... intense lights can get very hot and you'll have to make sure to keep them away from the canopy so you don't have a fire. Also... make sure everything is grounded well and all wires insulated. You wouldn't want an inadvertent electrocution during a rainstorm or from the heavy morning dew!

Keep your booth neat, tidy and clean. OK... I guess I sound a bit like your parent when you were a kid! What they told you was true though. Most people like to walk into a booth that doesn't look like a hurricane just swept through. You'll want to keep your bins in the back out of sight or underneath your display. Personally I think it's best to keep all the packing either in your truck or trailer. You can always get them right before teardown. Hopefully you won't need nearly as many as you arrived with! It's also important to keep your canopy top and sides in good condition. It's probably not a good idea to wash them every time you use the canopy unless you plan on replacing the fabric every few months... but occasionally washing in a gentle detergent something like woolite wouldn't hurt. That's especially important if you've torn down in a rainstorm or had some encounter with mud etc. I know that usually you're just so glad to have everything put away in your trailer or your truck that all you want to do is head home and get a warm shower! Unfortunately nature doesn't agree with you. Within a short time all the fabric on your canopy will begin to mildew and the metal legs will start to rust. Both events will make your canopy look terrible. Put yourself in the customer's shoes for a moment. Would you want to walk into a place of business with mildew on the walls and rust all around you? I might walk in... but chances are good that I'd also just turn around and walk out. I'll bet a lot of your potential customers feel the same way.

park rentals and the services they provide. Insurance companies have been gouging show sponsors. Advertising costs for events has increased when the media have a stranglehold on the commodity as they do in some of the larger markets. While all this has been going on the "trickle down" economics of increased expenses has been showing up with increased show fees, higher jury fees, increases in the cost of supplies and the amount of gas it takes to get to a show is reaching obscene levels!

too. You'll notice as you flip through the pages of our guide that we're adding more and more regional events of all sizes. We still include all the big shows you've come to expect from us over the years, but you'll also see several shows we haven't included before too. We've been making an effort to find the information for some of the smaller, local events we've overlooked in the past. Most of the time these shows offer you a reasonable selling opportunity at a lower show fee and closer to home. We've even found several free shows! While talking to some of the show sponsors we've discovered most of them are trying to hold the line on price increases by becoming more efficient or just simply by absorbing their increased expenses. Some shows have actually lowered fees or put together incentive packages to help both themselves and you.

You can do your part to hold down costs too. You may want to consider a more compact display, a more aerodynamic trailer that costs less to tow, maybe you'll want to think about trying to stay a little closer to home. Some exhibitors have switched to diesel trucks and cars to get better mileage or smaller vehicles. Lets face it, I'd rather be towing my trailer with a ¾ ton 454 Chevrolet Suburban but an S-10 would probably do the job just as well in most cases and I could double my mileage too. I don't really need half the stuff I was carting around anyway. When fuel was cheap and the economy was booming, we just didn't have to give much thought to this kind of thing because the transportation didn't represent a large enough proportion of the expense to get overly concerned about. We don't have to throw up our hands and go out of business... we just simply have to take the time to rethink our strategy and come back with a workable plan... and those plans DO exist... this is not a hopeless situation! It was easy to become "fat and happy" in the good times... but all of us have the ability to become lean and determined when faced with the current situation. There are people succeeding every single day... turning adversity to our advantage is what small business does best and what Americans have built our reputation on. It's been quite a while since I've been to the Buckler Promotions show in Tampa. In fact, the last time I was there I think there were at least a couple of hundred exhibitors! That was during what those of us who have been around the circuit for more than just a couple of years refer to as the "good ole' days." It's hard to believe that those days were just a few short years ago. Of course during that time a whole lot has changed in both the shows and the economy. This time out there were probably about 70 exhibitors at the show.

The last few years have been quite an adjustment period for everyone and of course that applies to show sponsors as well. I think and most of them appeared to be handmade! We've all heard about the massive quantities of buy/sell at these shows... and there is still a little of that, but the Bucklers are on a crusade to clean up the act and be more selective about what exhibitors are selling. You'll still find a bit of buy/sell. In fact, the Bucklers actually make provision for a few commercial type of exhibits. Those people pay more money to be at the show and the intention is to invite those commercial exhibitors who have non-competitive items to sell such as a home remodeler, a timeshare resort etc. These booths don't do much to enhance the crafts... but they do certainly help to increase the revenue and that benefits the exhibitors because of the additional advertising that can be purchased!

While were talking about advertising... you may fault the Bucklers for some things... but you'll never be able to fault them for not advertising! I've personally seen the Buckler staff out working hard putting up signs and even Margaret would most likely admit to making a few mistakes along the way to try to keep the crowds coming and the exhibitor selling. It's inevitable then to encounter some negativity about these shows. As the old adage goes... "the only way to avoid criticism is to attempt to do nothing... and even that can invoke some criticism!" The lesson to be learned here is not that none of us make errors in judgement or policy... the lesson is what did we learn from it! After talking to Margaret at some length, I think a lot was learned.

That brings us to this show. When I walked into the building I was pleasantly surprised to see a nice selection of crafts posters all over. They've had TV ads, radio ads, newspaper ads, billboards and more. Although you certainly make a horse drink... you certainly can lead him to water... or you can lead a customer to a craft show!

One of the advantages of a small show is that I have the opportunity to speak to quite a few people for more than 30 seconds. As I walked around this show and spoke to quite a few of the exhibitors I found that the majority of them seemed to think the show was worth the fee and the effort to exhibit there. I didn't see anyone calling the Brinks trucks to haul away the cash... but I didn't talk to anyone who felt they'd just wasted their time either.

Here's the moral of the story. Bucklers are on the road back to sponsoring quality craft shows. They are putting in some real effort and some real money to do it. Certainly it's going to take some time... but they've got a nice lineup of events and a core group of followers with some nice work to exhibit. Oh... one more thing I thought was exciting. Buckler Promotions has taken over management of THE HARVEST in Miami. The Historical Museum of South Florida who has sponsored the event for many years has decided to focus it's efforts in other areas. Since the show has historically provided some very good sales in the past it would have been a shame to just let it go so after some negotiation and a bit more discussion the Bucklers have taken the helm of the event. This show has a very good reputation in the southeast Florida area and should offer the promise of a good event this year too.

area I have to tell you I enjoy it. The people who shop at the show are a nice mix of locals and snowbirds... of down home country sort of folks mixed in with some sophisticated types too. Whether it's this event or one of the many other shows I've been to in the area, I always walk away with a pleasant feeling.

That's pretty much the way this show is too. This is a nice, laid back event with an easy load in and teardown located in a quaint little park just outside of town. Although you'll find some fine art here that will rival any you've seen elsewhere... you'll see some really nice crafts too. Although there weren't crowds that were elbow to elbow filling the aisles... there were plenty of customers and they were buying both types of work. I had the opportunity to speak with quite a few of the exhibitors and I've known a fair number of them for quite a few years. Although I didn't see a stampede of buyers lining up at anyone's booth... there was a steady stream of people throughout the day and several pieces were sold. The prize money isn't bad either at $6400.00.

Overall, this is a nice show to participate in. You probably won't get rich... but sales ought to justify the participation for just about everyone. At $115.00 to participate this is a nice, end of the season show and a good opportunity to sell in one of Florida's most pleasant communities.

Just about every year the final "hurrah" of the spring season in Florida is the Blue Crab Festival in Palatka. And every year we make sure to attend. The event really consists of two shows. The fine art show which is usually around the courthouse and the rest of the street which is the craft show. Then nearer the river but on the street you'll find the food court... finally there are always some carnival rides located right on the river and beside the bridge.

Normally something like carnival rides is the absolute kiss of death for a show... but for some reason it works here. Since the show usually beats Florida's "monsoon" season by a couple of weeks, there is always a good crowd and they normally do a fair amount of buying. I think most exhibitors felt that the sales were down a bit this year compared to years past, but by comparison to other shows throughout the season the Palatka Blue Crab Festival can still hold it's head high.

One of the things that makes this festival so successful is the outstanding promotion and advertising the committee does every year. They just don't leave many stones unturned when putting out the word. You'd have to be just about deaf, dumb and blind to miss information about the festival and even then you may find out about it!

Although there are always some fine artists selling work, this is primarily a craft show. And of the crafts, impulse sort of things or other lower priced items seemed to do best. If you've been on the circuit at all during the rest of the year, you're sure to run into quite a few fellow exhibitors you've met at other events. And although there is probably about a 30% or so turnover of exhibitors (by my rough observation) from year to year, there are quite a few regulars we see here every year too.

On the whole, the show is worth giving some consideration to for just about anyone with reasonably priced items to sell. You'll have a nice time with an easy setup and teardown, a chance to end the season in the company of some really nice fellow exhibitors and hey... chances are good you'll make some money too!

SHOW FEE REDUCTIONS! From The Broken Mold

Here is a bit of news I got from Dick Bartfay of The Broken Mold. Part of his business plan is to adapt and beginning offering "packages" that help both the exhibitor by offering lower fees... and help his business by having a more dependable level of participation. Here's what Dick has to say...

For the past twenty years, one of the main objectives of Joan and I organizing art and craft shows has been to provide exhibitors with a venue in which they would have the greatest opportunity to have a successful show. Reasonable rates, good promotion, quality arts and crafts, and ease of set-up and breakdown have been the cornerstones of our shows.

Now with little or no signs of the economy improving in the near future and shows continuing to be down, we wish to

and the Palm Beach Post with the Post being a co-sponsor for the 14th time. Since a portion of the proceeds go to benefit the United Way of Martin County, TV, radio, and print media promote this show via public service announcements. Additionally, 4 banners are placed at high visibility intersections in Stuart and flyers are sent to restaurants and motels. We also hope to have a write-up for the shows as we have had in the past. We are also considering having advertising on Comcast cable.

The Vero Beach show will again be advertised in The Vero Beach, Sebastian, Fort Pierce, Port St Lucie and Stuart Newspapers.
Over 12 real estate type signs will be placed around the city: a banner will be placed at Riverside Park, visible to people attending shows at the Riverside Theatre and we will also have an ad in the Playbill of the Riverside Theatre for two months. This ad will be seen by the public attending the Riverside Theatre nine or ten times a week for over eight weeks.
We are also considering Comcast as we did last year.

The St Augustine show will have the usual excellent advertising in the Record as well as show announcements in the neighboring cities such as Jacksonville, Gainesville, Ocala and Daytona Beach. This show also benefits the United Way of St. Johns County so public service announcements will be sent to TV, radio and other print media. Flyers will be posted in restaurants and motels. A banner will be placed at the entrance to Francis Field where the show will held. The banner will be facing the 1500 car parking garage which is immediately adjacent to the show. Last February's show was very successful due to having a great write up in the Record. We also have an excellent review of the show in the latest edition of Where The Shows Are!!!

Now then, to receive reduced rates for these shows you must participate in all three shows. Pay the $125 for the Stuart Show and receive a $25 reduced fee for both the Vero Beach and St Augustine shows. The fees for these two shows must be paid for in full no later than the Stuart Show (November 29-30). No coupons will be accepted for these shows and there will be no refunds less than 30 days before each show. At the St Augustine show, you will receive a $25 refund from the Stuart Show.

An additional incentive is that if you require a double booth containing the same work, you can receive the second booth at a 50% discount plus receive the above discounts.

We know the past few years have been difficult for many of you, and we hope the above offer will allow you to have the opportunity to be as successful as you have been in the past.

Please do not hesitate to contact us if you have any questions or require further information. See you in November, December and February.

Las Olas Riverfront shows.

We'd like to commend Dick for coming up with a few ideas to help everyone out and we'd certainly encourage other show sponsors to do the same!

Some of our picks for the upcoming season...

Every summer I have the chance to reflect back on all the events we've attended over the previous year. It's no wonder the miles just keep adding up on our vehicles. I think by now I must have just about the most comprehensive collections of pictures or art shows and craft shows known to man!

I'm sure I'll get in trouble with some of you for sticking my neck out on any of these events and I sure don't have a crystal ball to predict exactly what will happen in the 2008 - 2009 season. Also... as many shows as I've had the opportunity to visit... there are thousands more than I've yet to see. I'll interject one request at this point. If you'd like to contribute to the "shows you really ought to consider" section... be my guest! What were after here are reviews of shows you'd like to go back to year after year, not a capsule of every show you never wanted to attend in this or any other life!

So with all that being said, lets get on with it. I'm not going to spend paragraph after paragraph on each show, we'll just stick with a brief synopsis.

Although there are a handful of good shows in the summer in the south... anyone who's been through the show seasons more than once knows that the real action particularly with the outdoor events doesn't start until the fall begins.

If your work is a craft, and you're anxious to get the season rolling in September... and you're willing to go outside of the southeast just a little bit... you would want to give serious consideration to "Olde Salem Days" in Salem, Virginia. From Central Florida this is about an 11 hour drive. Now I'll grant you that isn't a "hop, skip and a jump" by any means... but it's certainly not impossible either. I've been to this show as an exhibitor and as an editor and I'll have to tell you... it's hard not to be impressed. It's only a one day show, but there is a literal sea of people who show up ready to buy just about all kinds of crafts. There are always a few fine artists there too, but they are in the minority as crafts are king at this event. I've always found Virginia to be an excellent market for both fine art and for crafts. If you like what you see there, you may want to also consider some of the other shows we've featured in this edition of the guide. The people at Virginia Shows (notice the ad right beside this article) produce some really excellent events in Richmond which is an easy drive from anywhere in the southeast. The first time I ever walked into her event I was particularly impressed with the fantastic crowd of shoppers and the excellent work by the exhibitors there.

Another group of shows that are just a short drive from the immediate southeast are the events put on by Herman and Sundra Steinhauer. You'll see their schedule right here on this page just above this article. Their summer and fall shows are usually very good and money makers for everyone. Their integrity and skill at promoting events. Here are a couple of summer events you might consider too.

While we're talking so much about professional show sponsors in the southeast, I just couldn't leave out the people from Carolina Shows. They don't have a display ad in this issue, but all their listings are here. You'll find events to attend in Florida, Georgia as well as North and South Carolina. I've heard so many good reports from crafters who exhibit in these events it would be hard to even know where to begin! The work in the shows is excellent... the sponsors treat all the exhibitors extremely well... the crowds of shoppers are always great and the sales are well worth the trip. Like most shows in the fall, crafts are the primary seller although there are always a couple of fine artists with select work who seem to do well.

The Riverside Arts Festival in Jacksonville which is sponsored by the Riverside/Avondale Preservation community organization in September (this year September 6 & 7) is really the "kick-off" event for shows in Florida. As usual there is always the chance of inclement weather this time of the year, but since the show takes place in northern Florida those chances begin to diminish as September rolls around. There actually used to be quite a few more choices of early season events, but the hurricanes have forced many of these events to just plain cease existence or reschedule the shows for later in the season. The RAP show has persisted and normally draws a nice crowd and good sales for both art and crafts. Last year when I stopped by the show it was the first year sales were awfully slow. Of course I sure didn't expect that with the history of the show... but it turns out that there was a lot of construction in the area leading up to the event and the park where the show takes place had been closed at some point over the summer. From what I gathered after having talked to a few of the locals, some of the news media we actually advising people to stay away from the area because of congestion. Hopefully this year all of that will be history and we can get back to having a good early season show. I plan on being there again this year and it would be great to see those crowds of shopper return!

Another early season show that offers you a chance to dust off the canopy and try your new work is the Deland Rivertown Fall Craft Show. This is another event I've been to a bunch of times. Like most shows in the early season, if the weather holds out and we don't have a hurricane the show usually turns out good. After a long summer of rainy days and limited money it's always good to have the opportunity to get the ball rolling again for the fall season.

Good summer shows in Florida are definitely hard to come by... but one we've heard does well for crafts is the Caladium

Festival in Lake Placid, FL. I've never personally attended the event although I was planning on it this year, but several people have told me the show is worth doing. Whenever you do a summer show in the south though, you just can't compare it to something you might participate in during November or December the prime months! I wish it were like that all year long! I'd be talking to you from my yacht just off the Grand Caymen Islands (I'm still writing from my house in Edgewater, Florida so I don't think any of us ought to get our hopes up too high).

As we move a bit further into the fall the choices just about explode! Finding a good show is like falling off a log because there are so many of them. In fact, I couldn't begin to do justice to the long list of shows you would most likely do well at. Here are just a few of my favorites every year.

Typically the fall shows in Cocoa Village are a good bet. These feature primarily crafts with a dash of fine art. They do have their ups and downs, but most exhibitors tell me these shows are worth the money and the time.

One of the most consistently good fall shows is the one that takes place in Micanopy during the first weekend of November. I've been to this show at least 15 times over the years and it's always packed with shoppers and just about everyone seems to do well.

There are some nice fine art shows in the fall too although the season is dominated by craft shows. The Lake Mary/ Heathrow show is a great opportunity for artists to exhibit and make money. The sponsors do a great job of attracting customers and there is always a nice selection of work at the event. Images in Ocala offers great prize money and decent sales. Here's another event that goes the extra mile to make sure you have a good opportunity to make money. We wouldn't want to forget the DeLand Fall Festival of the Arts either. This show now fits into the "well established" category, but it wasn't that long ago the event just started. The show has been well organized and very well promoted since its inception and every year we visit the event it seems to get even better. Good crowds, good sales and a super opportunity for fine artists in the fall. Oh... we shure wouldn't want to forget about the Winter Park Autumn Art Festival in mid October. Now in it's 35th year this show provides another early season opportunity for good sales and a nice crowd. In south Florida the South Miami Art Festival is now in it's 37th year and this is another event you won't want to miss!

I know I've left out a ton of fantastic shows and I could keep writing for another ten pages without touching on half the events I ought to. That of course is the challenge once I start writing! Good luck with your season this year, and make sure to let us know about YOUR best shows!
